Topps error cards create special memory, with more to come in now bright future

Like most longtime baseball card collectors, I've coveted Topps cards since I was a kid.

In the 1970s, a pack of Topps cards was a prize — even if your best cards did wind up bent, creased or clipped to bicycle spokes.

In the 1980s, when rival brands like Fleer, Donruss and Upper Deck flooded the market, Topps was still the brand to own. I remember hoping that one day I could pass the joy of Topps baseball cards along to my kids.

That day finally arrived last fall.

As my teenage daughter and I became engrossed in the MLB playoffs, I began to share with her my love for baseball cards. I showed her boxes and albums of my old cards, explained their history and significance and even took her to her first card show and bought her a few packs of her own.

In October, we got to share the ultimate sports moment together when our beloved Atlanta Braves won the 2021 World Series.

It was a special moment I wanted to somehow commemorate, and I was thrilled when Topps helped me do just that.

The day after the World Series, I went to the Topps website and ordered packs of the Topps Now World Series cards commemorating the Braves World Series victory. I bought a six-pack of cards highlighting the top World Series moments and a 15-card pack featuring the Braves top players.

Those packs would be a special Christmas gift for my fellow Braves fan and new card collector.

Six weeks later, the packs arrived and, like other Braves fans and collectors, I was shocked to learn that the 15-card pack featured two glaring errors on the back. The Topps cards declared that the Braves had won the World Series in five games instead of six. Even worse, it credited Braves manager Dusty Baker — the manager of the losing Astros!

At first, I was appalled and incredulous that Topps could make such egregious errors — especially on cards I purchased for sentimental value for a special Christmas gift.

But Topps did the right thing, apologizing for the mistakes and promising to send free reprints to everyone who received the error cards. (For my daughter, the reprints represented an additional Christmas gift.)

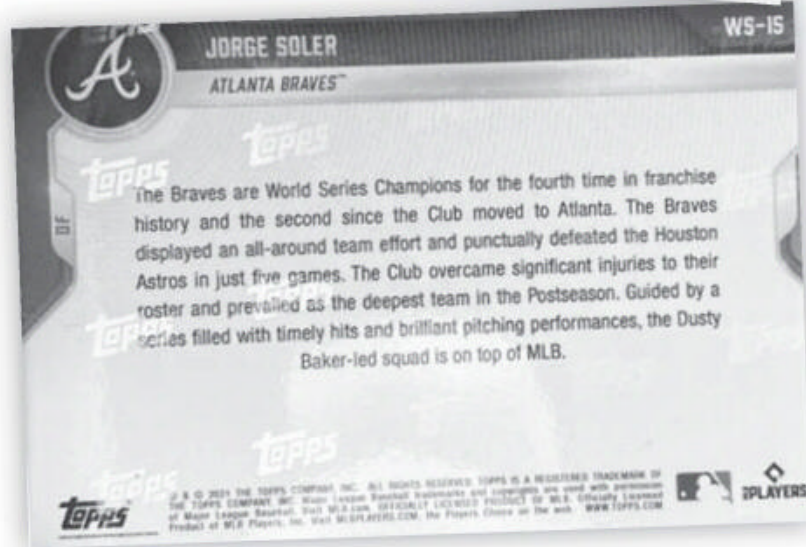

My concerns were eased further when the value of the error cards immediately spiked, with one eBay seller offering the full set for $5,000. (Prices have steadily declined since then, but are still higher than the reprints and are sure to gain value over the years.)

In hindsight, the special Topps Braves World Series cards now hold more than just sentimental value. Not only are they a potential investment but they have a story, one my daughter will hopefully remember and share for the rest of her collecting life.

Topps has been producing baseball cards for more than 70 years and for many collectors, those cards are more than just colorful pieces of cardboard. They are part of history — players and moments and stories that will one day bring back fond memories and a lot of nostalgia.

That's why Fanatics' recent purchase of Topps was a crucial development for the hobby.

The merchandising giant had already made a monumental move into the industry, acquiring the future rights to produce trading cards for all three major sports. By striking deals with MLB, NBA and the NFL, Fanatics put the future of Topps and Panini in doubt.

A future without Topps is one card collectors could not fathom. Fortunately, thanks to Fanatics latest move (see page 24), they won't have to.

Though Fanatics now owns the most iconic trading card company in history, the Topps brand will continue to create memories, stories and valuable treasures for years to come.

Memories, stories and treasures we can continue to pass on to our children.

TOM BRADY CARDS STILL RULE

YOUNG QBs SOAR WHILE NFL LEGENDS BRING BARGAINS

Hard to believe it's been two decades since Tom Brady burst onto the international sports scene. It was February 2002 when he calmly led New England on a memorable drive that resulted in a last-minute Super Bowl win.

In the process, he became the youngest QB to win a Super Bowl. As we've witnessed over the past 20 years, he was just getting started.

By adding six additional Super Bowl rings to his collection, he has secured his place as a hobby hero. This issue's Top 10 chart reflects Brady's ever-soaring popularity: He takes up the top two spots.

The item at No. 1 is no surprise: a 2000 Playoff Contenders autographed Brady Rookie Ticket card. At No. 2 is one we don't see quite as often in our Top 10: a 2002 Topps Finest Xfractor marked #16 of 20. It appeared in an eBay auction in December and sold for $75,000 on 54 bids.

Just outside our Top 10 were two more Brady cards. One was a 2000 Upper Deck SPx that exceeded $40,000. The other was a 2000 UD Gold Reserve that brought $32,100. The reverse side gives us a gem of a prognostication: "Brady was very productive his final two seasons at Michigan, guiding his team to consecutive bowl victories. His accuracy should make him a top backup."

Top Ten Online Auctions

- 1. $95,101 on 95 bids: 2000 Playoff Contenders Tom Brady Rookie Ticket, auto (BGS 9, 10 auto)
- 2. $75,000 on 54 bids: 2002 Topps Finest Tom Brady Xfractor, #16/20 (BGS 9.5)
- 3. $70,100 on 98 bids: 2018-19 Panini Prizm Luka Doncic Blue Ice, #25/99 (PSA 10)
- 4. $63,432 on 68 bids: 1955 Topps Roberto Clemente (PSA 8)

- T8. $45,100 on 52 bids: 2020 Panini National Treasures Justin Herbert, #92/99, auto patch (BGS 9)
- T8. $45,100 on 67 bids: 2020 Panini Contenders Justin Herbert Cracked Ice, #16/22, auto (PSA 10)
- 10. $45,000 on 47 bids: 2020 Panini National Treasures Justin Herbert, #18/99, auto patch (BGS 9)

BENGAL BOMBER BURROW

After having his promising rookie year cut short by an injury, Joe Burrow picked up in this sophomore campaign where he left off last season. He led the surprising Bengals to an AFC North title, throwing for 34 TDs and 4,611 yards during the regular season. He was particularly impressive in the three-game stretch that pushed Cincinnati to the top, throwing 11 TDs (with no interceptions) in that span.

Collectors have remained bullish on Burrow. The item of choice is his 2020 Panini National Treasures autographed patch card. In December, an example graded BGS 9.5 and stamped #23 of 99 sold for $30,100 on 39 bids. A slightly lesser-grade example, a BGS 9 marked #31 of 99, brought $24,900. An ungraded example drew $20,100 on 25 bids.

What if that card shows up in Mint condition? Well, we reported on just such an animal earlier in this NFL season: Graded PSA 10, it fetched $46,255.

HERBERT IN A HURRY

Keeping pace with Joe Burrow is his fellow sophomore-class quarterback, Justin Herbert. The Chargers' gunslinger has soared quickly to the upper echelon of NFL QBs. As a rookie last season, he tossed 31 touchdowns with 4,336 passing yards. This year, he exceeded both totals — 38 and 5,014 yards.

Not surprisingly, he blitzed our Top 10 list and snagged the 8th, 9th and 10th slots, thanks to signed Panini jersey cards that each brought more than $45,000. Two more Herbert cards show up in our "next 10" list, as you'll see below, selling for prices of $41,100 and $32,600.

As healthy as those figures look, they're actually lighter than prices we reported two months prior. In November, a PSA 10-graded Contenders Cracked Ice Herbert insert (one of only 22 made) fetched $75,100 on 120 bids. Two other National Treasures patch cards from an edition of 99 sold for prices of $70,200 and $66,200. It reaffirms the notion that sometimes hobby trends don't make sense.

IS A-RODG GETTING THE COLD SHOULDER?

Considering the prices of the high-end Brady, Burrow and Herbert cards noted above, Aaron Rodgers cards are absolute steals. It's understandable that Brady draws higher prices — he's been around five years longer than Rodgers and has all those Super Bowl rings. But the Packer QB has had a remarkably productive career, winning one MVP (and expected to snag a second for the 2021 campaign) and a Super Bowl while breaking the Green Bay touchdown-pass record formerly held by Brett Favre.

Consider the (relative) Rodgers bargains secured by eBay bidders in recent weeks:

- $18,702 on 25 bids for a 2005 Topps Chrome signed Gold Xfractor card graded PSA 10 and marked #68 of 399.
- $13,433 on 41 bids for an ungraded 2005 Upper Deck Exquisite signed Super Jersey card marked #12 of 15.
- $12,800 on 59 bids for a 2005 Topps Turkey Red graded PSA 10. This one is a “no frills” issue: no autograph, no patch — just a cool design based on classic Turkey Red tobacco cards.
- $9,356 on 57 bids for an ungraded 2020 Flawless autographed jersey card. The patch in this 1-of-1 card features the NFL shield.
- $8,000 on 54 bids for a 2005 Playoff Contenders signed Rookie Ticket card graded PSA 9.
- $7,100 on 43 bids for a 2005 Topps Chrome Refractor graded BGS 9.5.

BARGAIN LEGENDS

Current QBs — those mentioned above, plus Patrick Mahomes II and Josh Allen — are magnets for collector dollars. Legendary QBs of the past, however, seem to be falling into “afterthought” mode. Consider:

- A Sammy Baugh 1948 Bowman card recently auctioned for just $4,151 on 40 bids, despite having a Near-Mint PSA 8 grade.
- A Bart Starr 1957 Topps rookie graded PSA 7 sold for $3,333 on 32 bids.
- A John Unitas PSA 7-grade rookie, also from Topps' 1957 set, got away for $3,112 on 41 bids. Another PSA 7 Unitas rookie was even less pricey at $2,837 on 224 bids.
- An Otto Graham rookie, from Bowman's 1950 set, went to a collector for $2,126 on 41 bids. It was graded SGC 7.
- A Joe Montana 1982 Topps rookie in PSA 9 condition sold for $2,175 on 43 bids in early January 2022.

The moral is: If you collect quarterback legends, you can find undervalued gems on eBay, even in this hobby boom era.

ON THE OUTSIDE LOOKING IN

You'd like to call a baseball card bearing a Babe Ruth autograph and a sliver of a Bambino-used bat a holy grail. One collector acquired that exact treasure in an eBay auction that landed at $32,000.

The Topps Tier One Cut Signatures Relic card was issued by Topps in 2021, and it brought enough at auction to earn a place on our “next 10” list, presented here:

- $44,544 on 64 bids: 2020 Topps Chrome Formula 1 Sapphire Lewis Hamilton Gold, #1/50 (PSA 10)
- $41,500 on 41 bids: 2003-04 Topps Chrome LeBron James Black Refractor, #102/500 (BGS 9)
- $41,200 on 7 bids: 2020-21 Panini National Treasures LaMelo Ball, #86/99, auto patch (PSA 9)
- $41,100 on 95 bids: 2020 Panini National Treasures Justin Herbert, #8/99, auto patch (BGS 8.5)
- $41,000 on 54 bids: 2018 Panini National Treasures Josh Allen Stars and Stripes, #3/3, auto patch (BGS 8.5, auto 10)
- $40,099 on 103 bids: 2000 Upper Deck SPx Tom Brady, #1221/1350 (PSA 10)
- $35,000 on 1 bid: 2009 Bowman Chrome Mike Trout Xfractor, #143/225, auto (BGS 9.5)
- $32,600 on 65 bids: 2020 Panini National Treasures Justin Herbert, #95/99, auto patch (BGS 8.5)
- $32,100 on 82 bids: 2000 Upper Deck Tom Brady Gold Reserve, #2274/2500 (PSA 10)
- $32,000 on 67 bids: 2021 Topps Tier One Babe Ruth Cut Signatures Relic, auto, bat slice, #1/1 (PSA 9)

NEW US COINS COMMEMORATE 100TH ANNIVERSARY OF NEGRO LEAGUES

The United States Mint opened sales for the 2022 Negro Leagues Baseball Commemorative Coin Program on Jan. 6, commemorating the 100th anniversary of the Negro National League.

The league formed in 1920 in response to African-American players being banned from baseball's major leagues. The first organized professional league for black players paved the way for more than 2,600 African-American and Hispanic players to play professionally, including such legendary stars as Jackie Robinson, Hank Aaron, Willie Mays, Satchel Paige, Larry Doby, Ernie Banks and Roy Campanella.

The league lasted until 1960 — 13 years after Robinson broke the major league color barrier in 1947.

The U.S. Mint is producing $5 gold coins, $1 silver coins and half-dollar coins. The Jackie Robinson silver medal has the same design as the Jackie Robinson Congressional Gold Medal produced in 2003.

The Coin and Medal Set is limited to 15,000 units and is available during a 30-day window. The Silver Dollar features a privy mark on the obverse of the coin commemorating the 100th anniversary in 2020. It is limited to 20,000 units.

"Just as this game connects families and communities, every day, across the Nation, the Mint connects Americans through coins," said United States Mint Deputy Director Ventris C. Gibson. "It is now our great privilege to connect America to the extraordinary legacy of Negro Leagues Baseball."

Surcharges of $35 for each $5 gold coin, $10 for each silver dollar and $5 for each half dollar will go to the Negro Leagues Baseball Museum.

"The Negro Leagues Baseball Museum is thrilled to partner with the United States Mint on the release of these historic coins that beautifully captures the winning spirit of the Negro Leagues," said Negro Leagues Baseball Museum President Bob Kendrick. "We hope that collectors and baseball fans alike will purchase these coins and support the Negro Leagues Baseball Museum efforts to ensure that the legacy and important life lessons of the Negro Leagues plays on."

Introductory sales prices are in effect until Feb. 7, when regular pricing will take effect. Coins can be ordered at catalog.usmint.gov/ or 1-800-USA-MINT (872-6468).

Collectors, industry insiders applaud Fanatics' purchase of iconic Topps brand

BY GREG BATES

When 2022 dawned, Fanatics made its next big move toward becoming a giant in the trading card industry.

Four months after it acquired the licenses to produce baseball, basketball and football cards beginning in 2023, Fanatics bought longtime trading card company Topps.

Fanatics CEO Michael Rubin confirmed the deal, which was reportedly for $500 million.

"With trading cards and collectibles being a significant pillar of our long-term plans to become the leading digital sports platform, we are excited to add a leading trading cards company to build out our business," Rubin said in a press release. "Their iconic brand, commitment to product excellence and passionate employees worldwide will allow us to immediately serve our league and players' association partners and our fans."

Rubin said Fanatics plans to keep the Topps brand, which has been synonymous with baseball cards for the past 70 years, and possibly bring back Topps football and basketball cards once those licensing deals go into effect.

For those in the trading card industry, the move to buy Topps was almost expected. Sports Collectors Digest spoke with a number of industry leaders about the latest big news.

"I don't think a lot of people were surprised by this," Collectable CEO Ezra Levine said the day after the news broke. "I think the idea that Fanatics was not going to make a major play and expedite their timeline was something that people weren't really buying. Topps is obviously a household name. It's something that resonates with every collector, every investor in the category."

"I think people are generally pleased that Topps IP and their brand will survive and hopefully thrive under new management and new innovation. I think it certainly aligns with what the consumers were craving. It was a smart move by Fanatics.”

Tech entrepreneur and Sports Card Investor founder Geoff Wilson assumed Fanatics was going to try to obtain one of the card manufacturers, and Topps was the leading candidate.

“I thought it was the most attainable for them to probably get a hold of and their brands are frankly the most important, they have the most long-term equity in the hobby,” Wilson said. “I thought that Fanatics acquiring a brand would help them accelerate into the market more quickly, to have all that existing infrastructure to be able to build on top of instead of having to start everything from scratch. I also think the consistency of Fanatics being able to carry Topps’ current brands into the future is really important for the transition to Fanatics to go smoothly.”

Collectors Universe CEO Nat Turner is a big collector and feels it was the right move for Topps and Fanatics.

“Topps had a one-to-one relationship with baseball, it seemed. From a card perspective, it was really just about baseball, and with the loss of the license from the long-term perspective, frankly, it kind of seemed like it was their best option,” Turner said.

“I’m not in the boardroom with them, but I have to think that you want to be the first one to sell in these situations. If Fanatics had bought someone else, then they wouldn’t have to pay as much for the next one. Now Fanatics has a brand in Topps that they can apply to other licenses and it doesn’t make the other companies as valuable. I think Topps was probably smart to be the first.”

Vintage Breaks and Just Collect Inc. founder Leighton

Sheldon was excited to hear the news about the Topps sale.

“I think it’s exciting for collectors, I think it’s exciting for investors, I think it’s exciting for dealers,” Sheldon said. “I think overall, as a macro, it’s very exciting for the ecosystem. The Topps brand name was super important to live on, because even though I know that right now we feel like there’s this title wave in the industry and it’s moving with just incredible force, make no mistake, when you build a house, you need a foundation, and the foundation of the industry has been Topps for 50 years.”

Sheldon believes the deal is good for everyone in the hobby, including longtime collectors and hobby shops.

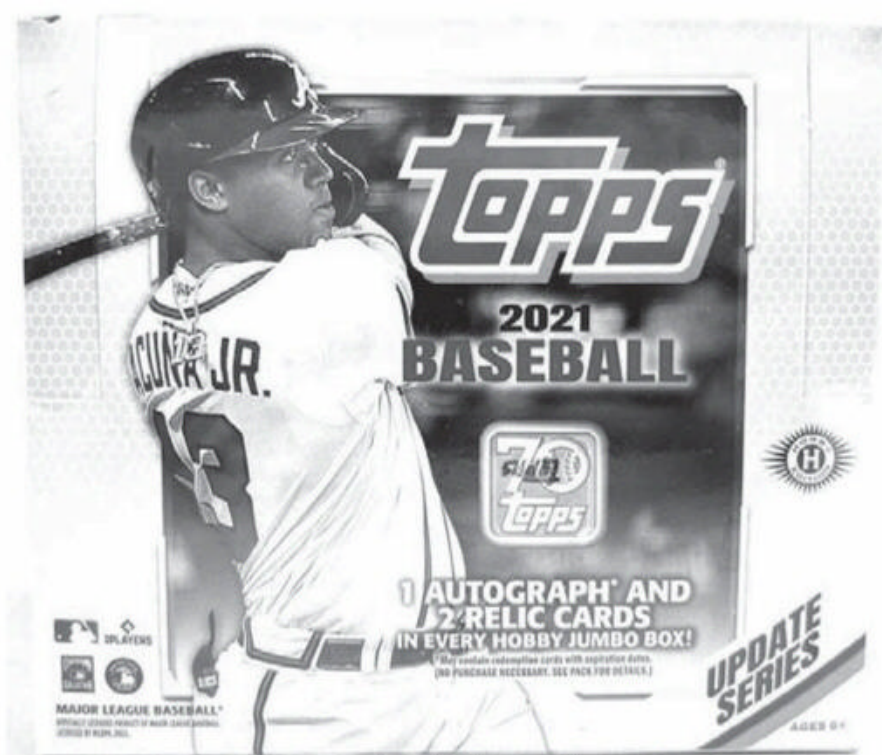

“I think everyone personally is breathing a sigh of relief and it’s a breath of fresh air that [it] happened a lot more quickly than everyone thought,” he said.

Fanatics, in a sense, forced Topps to consider a sale when it struck licensing deals with all three major sports. Its contract with the MLB Players Association was set to begin in 2023, with deals with MLB, the NBA and its players association and the NFL Players Association taking effect in 2026.

Topps was on the verge of going public in August in a deal that valued the company at more than $1 billion. But Fanatics’ exclusive agreement with MLB upended that deal, putting the future of Topps in question and paving the way for the sale.

Sooz Lulgjuraj, who was Topps’ marketing communications manager from 2014-19, agrees the sale is good for collectors.

“I think all the previous things that had happened, we can’t control the fact that Fanatics came in and bought everything out, but this was probably the best possible course of action for collectors,” Lulgjuraj said. “I think this is actually the best thing for Fanatics; it has the brand equity and the brand name, 70 years of history for Topps. They continue to [produce] baseball cards and also the executives who were initially going to be in that SPAC (special purpose acquisition company) deal still get to make money back. I don’t know if it was as much as it would have been on the SPAC deal, but they make money back.

“For collectors, you still get baseball cards and it will continue. We didn’t know if it was going to continue past 71 years, but now we know it will continue for at least another 20.”

Heritage Auctions Executive Vice President Derek Grady believes Topps being able to continue to produce trading cards is going to increase demand in the hobby.

“I think for anybody that’s a collector or in this business as a dealer or an auction house, the more people that enjoy our hobby, the better it is for everybody,” Grady said. “I hate to see it took a pandemic to take the hobby to another level where the shows are basically sold out, the attendance is crazy, The National was outstanding, the next National’s probably going to be outstanding. For lack of a better term, the hobby’s on steroids.”

Topps produced its first baseball cards in 1951, but it was the ’52 issue that has become the trademark for the company. It produced Mickey Mantle’s most iconic card, one year after Bowman’s release. Topps hasn’t missed a set since.

That longevity and brand recognition is what collectors love. The Topps name will live on as Fanatics won’t mess with what will now be its flagship brand.

Turner says that’s good news for collectors and everyone in the industry.

“Nobody wants Fanatics brand of trading cards, let’s just be clear about that,” Turner said. “I think collectors, myself included and hundreds of them who work at PSA, are very obstinate and we just like what we like. I think the fact that this frankly means that there won’t be Fanatics brand of trading cards is awesome. It kind of removes that possibility.”

Turner created a stir on social media when he tweeted “Topps Chrome basketball, here we come,” whetting the appetite of collectors.

“There are a lot of old-school collectors where that idea is like bringing back the old brands into the sports they used to be in, and it’s like crazy exciting,” he said.

Industry leaders are excited about the possibility that Fanatics could bring back some of Topps’ most renowned products once its basketball and football licenses kick in. Topps has not produced basketball cards since 2009. It has not been able to put out a licensed football product since 2015. Panini owns the licenses to produce basketball and football cards with the Fanatics deals for those sports beginning in 2026.

Longtime card collector Mike Moynihan views Fanatics’ acquisition of Topps as incredibly positive.

“All my collector friends are over the moon excited,” he said. “Not only the continuation of baseball, which [Topps] has had forever, but the reintroduction of, imagine Topps Chrome basketball, imagine Topps Heritage basketball and football cards and Ginter, Finest. So many wonderful ideas now that almost everything is kind of [under] one umbrella. The opportunities are phenomenal.”

Turner can’t wait to get his hands on some great Topps products that could be revived from years past.

“The thing that most excites me ... we’re going to hopefully have Topps brands on basketball and football cards, which has been sorely missed, at least from my perspective,” he said.

Added Lulgjuraj: “Those are two products for NBA and NFL that people are going to go crazy for, especially for me. I love Topps Chrome.”

Wilson is also excited by the opportunity for Topps to bring back its Chrome product. He believes it's a staple for both football and basketball and emphasized that Topps does a good job with high-end products for baseball such as Transcendent and Diamond Icons. He would love to see those incorporated into other major professional sports.

Levine agrees.

"It will be interesting to see what they do," Levine said. "What's interesting about this combination is now Fanatics can do some really interesting things with the legacy brands and new-age brands."

Turner is hoping Fanatics will do a great job producing cards and keep the industry on a high note.

"The jury is still out if Fanatics is going to do the right thing from a ... products standpoint," he said. "I think a lot of us collectors have been disappointed with how the manufacturers have overproduced and sticker autographs, cut a lot of corners. You can say it's COVID, but I mean they're still printing like crazy. I'm very hopeful. I think change is a good thing.

"The jury is still out, though, on will Fanatics make Topps even better. I think they will. I hope they will."

Since Fanatics has made two major deals in the last four months with its licensing deals and purchasing Topps, more moves might be in store sooner than later.

"It's an aggressive global company," Grady said. "Who knows what's next. I wouldn't bet against them. ... The sky's the limit. I'm curious to see what they do next."

Turner, who was part of the group that bought Collectors Universe last year, is predicting Fanatics and Rubin aren't done.

"If I've learned anything, Rubin is the dealmaker of the century, and kudos to him," Turner said. "I'd be shocked if he doesn't have more tricks up his sleeve."

CONSUMER CONCERNS

Topps sale generates excitement but raises more questions for card shops, distributors

BY GREG BATES

MLB pitcher Matt Strahm, the host of "The Card Life," chats with John Gola, owner of AZ Sports Cards in Phoenix. Collectors hope hobby shops continue to thrive under Fanatics. (PHOTO CREDIT: THE CARD LIFE)

For the last 26 years, Sports Card Junction has been receiving its Topps products directly from the manufacturer.

Collectors consistently stream into the Pittsburgh-based shop to pick up the latest Major League Baseball releases from Topps. In August, shop owner Chad Weldon didn't know if that would be the case in the future.

When word came down that Fanatics had secured the MLB and MLB Players Association licenses previously held by Topps, Weldon dealt with plenty of uncertainty as to whether hobby shops would be included in Fanatics' distribution plans.

Flash forward four months when Fanatics purchased Topps in early January, and Fanatics' intent is still a bit murky.

Weldon said when the news first broke, he was "crazy optimistic" about the future, but he still has reservations over whether Fanatics might cut out some of the middle men between the company and consumers.

"That's something people have been talking about for months when the licenses were first taken over," Weldon said. "There was a lot of direct-to-consumer talk initially. You just don't know. We were trying not to panic until actual news broke originally."

In an interview with CNBC the day after the Topps sale was announced, Fanatics owner Michael Rubin sounded like he's all for local card shops continuing to be a major player in the industry.

"The hobby shops are still critically important to us,"

Rubin said. "They're always going to be a vital part of this business forever."

Weldon isn't the only shop owner pondering endless, unanswered questions about the future.

Orlando Sportscards South owner Kendall Loyd is currently experiencing the best two-year run in his 30-plus years in business.

"There were some years that were tough and everything, but the last two years have made up for a lot of that. So, when you hear that news, it's concerning," Loyd said. "When you hear [Fanatics'] owner come out, and maybe he's changed his tune a little bit, but early on saying, direct-to-consumer, that's scary. Cut out the middle men or whatever. Is the middle man the distributor? Is the middle man a card shop owner?"

Loyd doesn't believe Fanatics can succeed selling sports cards directly to consumers the way it does sports apparel and other merchandise.

"Selling a hat, selling a jersey can work. There's not excitement in that," he said. "You get a hat, who are you going to show it to? Are there people jumping up and down? On the other hand, selling a box of cards to people and they're sitting in their house opening it by themselves or with a wife or girlfriend who don't really care, and you pull that big card and you're all excited, but there's no one to be excited with."

"But in a store, there's other customers, there's an audience, there's me. You know, I go along with it. If the guy's excited, then I'm excited. It's almost like a little fraternity or a sports bar where you hang out. I think [Fanatics] is wise enough to know that's not going to happen just direct-to-consumer."

Scott Mahlum, who has run Mill Creek Sports in Mill Creek, Wash. for 30 years, has a slightly different tone. He says Fanatics buying Topps is good for the industry and believes it will make the best decisions to help the hobby's escalating growth.

"Fanatics has become huge because they're smart and I think they're going to view [card shops] as partners with them," Mahlum said. "I don't think they want to see the sports card shop go away. They understand that we're a meeting place and a place where collectors and consumers can come and see the product in person and hold it versus an online presence. I feel pretty confident it's going to be a great relationship."

Phil Castinetti's Sportsworld in Saugus, Mass. opened in 1986 amid a strong point in the hobby. Castinetti has gone through his ups and downs since then but is enjoying another prosperous period.

Card shops are the lifeblood of the hobby for many collectors.

He'd like his hobby shop and others around the country to continue to get product and have retail chains be cut out of the mix.

"Somebody's going to get the short end of the stick, there's no doubt about that," Castinetti said. "Everybody can't keep thriving the way it is. I would love to see like the Walmarts and Targets, you can eliminate them. They've got enough other stuff going on, you know, give us a break."

DISTRIBUTION QUESTIONS

A lot of hobby shops that have been around for decades get their product directly from the manufacturer. Newer shops may not have the connections with Topps and other card manufacturers and generally have to receive their product through distributors.

GTS Distribution, based in Everett, Wash., is the largest trading card distributor in the United States, shipping cards to several hundred hobby shops around the country. Distributors are also in the dark as to how Fanatics is going to get cards to collectors.

Could Fanatics cut out the distributors?

"We haven't heard anything related to that at all," said GTS Distribution Director of Marketing Rob Bertrand. "We're extremely optimistic about the opportunities ahead, simply because it seems Fanatics is committed to growing the space and they'll need to lean on established partners."

"Knowing that we've got a strong track record and a good history, we think it's just going to be an opportunity to grow the market."

Fanatics has yet to announce its distribution plans. Once it does, card shop owners hope to have some input.

"When someone buys out another business, the first thing you do is go to the people that are in the trenches," Loyd said. "Go to the people who run it every day, the guys who actually run that business or that store. You have to go to them to find out what is really going on."

"... Either call stores or visit stores from Florida to California and get everybody's opinion of what we think. What can we do to keep everything going strong, because it's strong now. It would be sad to take a step back, and people don't like change."

Castinetti wants to hear that hobby shops will continue to be valuable to the industry.

"I just want them to say, you know what, we're going to first of all keep it to the brick-and-mortar shops and give them first crack at whatever is out there, then you do something with the retailers and the big stores," Castinetti said. "We're the backbone of this business, so give us the first shot at it."

While card collectors are generally excited about the Topps sale, long-time hobbyists hope Fanatics will also retain the history and nostalgia the brand cultivated.

One of the most well-known card collectors in the industry is Marshall Fogel, the owner of one of the three PSA 10 1952 Mickey Mantle cards. Fogel grew up collecting Topps cards and all the greats: Mantle, Ted Williams and Willie Mays, to name a few.

Fogel, who turns 81 in January, is happy to see the Topps company live on after 71 years of making baseball cards.

"They're like George Mikan, the beginning of basketball, or like Knute Rockne," Fogel said. "They're the real deal. They're the ones that started putting gum into cards. They did a lot for the industry. They did a lot for kids. And I think they should be well remembered for what used to be. To me, you don't lose that."

What's been lost, Fogel says, is the innocence of collecting, including the pure joy of buying cards at the local shop.

"We've lost the nostalgia of what it used to be, going to the Candyland, buying a pack of cards, hoping you could get Mantle," Fogel said. "Not concerned about centering, not concerned about how much trading cards are worth, put them in the spokes of your tires, flip them against the wall and making a child's game and having fun. It's lost its innocence, and I was part of that. Now it's an investment. The game has changed."

"There's a tear in my eye, not because it didn't grow, because it isn't what it was."

SPORTS COLLECTIBLE BOOM SPARKS HERITAGE AUCTIONS TO RECORD $1.4 BILLION IN SALES IN 2021

2021 was a historic year for sports collectibles, and no company proved that more than Heritage Auctions, which topped $1.4 billion in sales.

Buoyed by another banner year for sports collectibles, the 45-year-old, Dallas-based auction house topped $1 billion in sales for the first time.

Heritage set numerous auction world records in 2021, including the most valuable Michael Jordan jersey and the top-selling hockey trading card. It also set records for the most valuable comic book, J.C. Leyendecker painting, video game, Peanuts artwork and Harry Potter book.

"Heritage is built by collectors and for collectors," says Heritage Auctions CEO and co-founder Steve Ivy. "Even when we are talking about serious money, the passionate pursuit of a collector is still a pursuit of fun, and we will never forget this. Our extraordinary success in 2021 was due to this very fact: We don't sell things. We offer memories, passions, pursuits that bring broad grins to our clients' faces."

Heritage's collector-client base grew to more than 1.5 million clients worldwide in 2021 — an addition of more than 270,000 since January 2020. Those new clients also followed an industry trend — they were younger than ever, with 37 percent of first-time bidders being millennials.

Nearly all of Heritage's more than 40 categories saw an increase in sales, including Heritage Sports, which nearly topped $200 million in total sales, more than doubling its total from a banner 2020.

Heritage Sports made headlines in May when the Canadian version of Wayne Gretzky's 1979 rookie card sold for a world-record $3.75 million.

Heritage also sold two of the iconic 1909 T206 Honus Wagner cards for more than $2.2 million each. The first Wagner sale was part of a record $42 million sports month in February.

Heritage also brokered two record sales for Michael Jordan memorabilia, including the first million-dollar Jordan card, which sold for $1.4 million. Three months later, it sold the only known Jordan game-worn University of North Carolina jersey photo-matched to his NCAA Player of the Year season for $1.38 million, making it the most expensive Jordan jersey ever sold.

Heritage also set records in Comic Books and Comic Art with more than $181 million in sales, a 117 percent increase over 2020, establishing the auction house as one of the world's leading auctioneers of comics and comic art. Records sales included the best-known copy of Batman No. 1 for $2.2 million, the highest price ever for a Dark Knight comic book, and one of four known near-mint copies of the Amazing Fantasy No. 15 Spider-Man debut for $3.6 million, the most expensive comic book ever sold at auction.

Four Decades of Sports and Lelands

A collage of baseball memorabilia. In the upper left is a vintage black and white portrait of a young Joe Jackson in a baseball uniform. To its right is a gold-colored baseball glove. Below the portrait is a brown paper sign with the text: "BASE BALL FANS ATTENTION! can we turn down 'Shoeless' Joe Jackson GREATEST OF ALL OUTFIELDERS without further hearing? Are you sure he was not 'FRAMED ALIVE' in scandal. Some may think they have him buried COME-BACK. JOE JACKSON comes of too good a stock to be vanquished only by a fair game, on the Base... challenges any... to beat him... And JOE...". To the right of the sign is a worn, yellowed baseball. In the bottom right corner, there are three baseball cards in protective sleeves. The top card is a 1915 Zeenut P.C.L. card of Fred McMullen, labeled "HAND CUT". The middle card is a 1916 M101 card of Babe Ruth, labeled "5 SPOT" and "BLANK BACK". The bottom card is a 1917 Collins-McCarthy card of Babe Ruth, labeled "GOOD 2(MK) 44228733". The cards show Babe Ruth in various poses, including one in a batting stance and another in a fielding pose.

UPPER DECK LAUNCHES HIGHLY ANTICIPATED AEW WRESTLING CARDS

With All Elite Wrestling gaining steam and giving WWE its first real competition since the Attitude Era of the 1990s, Upper Deck has launched its first series of AEW trading cards.

The highly anticipated release is the latest in Upper Deck's growing portfolio and offers wrestling fans and collectors of wrestling memorabilia an alternative to Topps' WWE brand.

AEW has become the nation's fastest growing wrestling organization thanks in large part to such former WWE stars as Chris Jericho, Cody Rhodes, Bryan Danielson (Daniel Bryan in WWE), John Moxley and wrestling legends like Sting and Kenny Omega.

All are featured in Upper Deck's first AEW series, along with new stars The Young Bucks (Matt & Nick Jackson), AEW World Champion Hangman Page, AEW Women's World Champion Dr. Britt Baker, former AEW World Tag Team Champions The Lucha Brothers, Miro, Darby Allin and more.

"The response to our exclusive AEW relationship was overwhelming, so we are excited to release our highly anticipated inaugural set," said Upper Deck Sports Brand Manager Paul Zickler.

"We're thrilled to put AEW's renowned talent in the spotlight like never before."

The inaugural AEW set features several rare and iconic cards, including shadowbox cards in Wednesday In Action, rare autographs in The Dotted Line and memorable moments from the legendary career of Rhodes in Rhodes to Success.

Upper Deck has also teamed up with Jazwares, the exclusive licensor for AEW figurines, to create a 100-card Yellow base set. The set features 3-card packs in select Jazwares figurines starting with the release of Unmatched Series 3 in early 2022.

Upper Deck AEW card sets are now available at hobby shops nationwide and through select retailers. The inaugural set will also be available at a later date through Upper Deck e-Pack, an online platform that allows collectors to buy, open, collect and trade digital and physical cards.

NEW RELEASES FOR NEW YEAR

PANINI, TOPPS KICK OFF 2022 WITH HIGH-END SETS FOR FOOTBALL, BASKETBALL AND BASEBALL

2021-22 PANINI NBA HOOPS BASKETBALL

We finally started to see some of this season's basketball rookie crop in their NBA uniforms on Jan. 7. The flagship and iconic Hoops Basketball will make an impact in a hobby starving for basketball releases. The product offers the first pack-issued true rookie cards of first-year players in their NBA uniforms.

You can also find a wide array of inserts and parallels, including NBA 75th Anniversary cards that pay homage to the recently announced 75th Anniversary team. Look for packs jammed with inserts, including hobby-exclusive High Voltage, Highlights, HIPnotized, Jamtastic, Legends of the Ball and Prime Twine.

The autograph selection is wide ranging and can be found in Hoops Hot Signatures, Hot Signatures Rookie or Rookie Ink format.

There are also red parallels that are exclusive and numbered to just 25 copies.

Hobby boxes offer eight cards per pack and 24 packs per box with one autograph per box on average. Hoops Hobby was preselling in the $250-275 range. I know everyone working at the shop and many of our customers are ready to see some current year NBA products.

2021 PANINI MOSAIC FOOTBALL

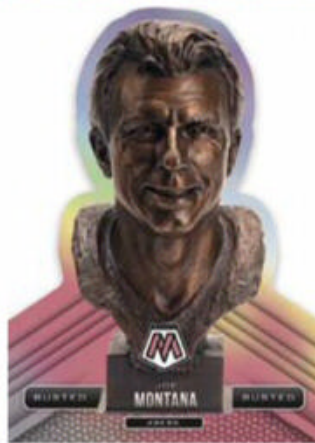

Mosaic Football returned in mid-January for its sophomore season. After a rookie campaign where it found traction and secured itself on the same level as Select, Optic and near Prizm, Mosaic is back for more.

The base set offers 300 cards, including rookies, former greats and a Super Bowl MVPs subset. There are several hobby exclusive parallels and they drop at a rate of 15 per hobby box. Find the classic silvers, red, blue, purple, white, gold and black Mosaic cards.

The inserts come at you faster than the Kansas City Chiefs offense with two per hobby pack.

Look for Center Stage, Straight Fire, Staremasters and a number of other fun inserts. Beyond those listed, there are new case hit inserts that include a die-cut Bust, which is an image of many of the all-time great Hall of Famers as they are honored on their Canton bust. Also grab the Glass Mosaic, Masquerade Ballers and Storm Chasers super rare inserts.

The autographed cards include Mosaic and Rookie Autographed Mosaic found exclusively in Hobby boxes.

Mosaic hobby boxes, which retail for around $700, offer 15 cards per pack, 10 packs per box and 12 boxes per case. You should find two autographs, five silver parallels, 15 Mosaic parallels and 20 total inserts per hobby box.

2022 TOPPS STERLING BASEBALL

Sterling comes across home plate as the first high-end baseball release of the new year. If you are looking for card quantity, this definitely isn't the product for you, but if you're looking for super high-end cards, it's worth considering. It offers one master box consisting of two themed boxes each holding a single card.

Sterling offers one autographed relic card numbered to 25 or less per box and a chance at a 1-of-1 card. It showcases the fact that no card will be numbered higher than 25 and it offers a wide array of on-card autos.

Sterling Debuts features top rookies; Sterling Seasons features players with outstanding years; Sterling Strikes features the top pitchers in the game; and Sterling Swings features, you guessed it, the top hitters in Major League Baseball.

This is one of the elite products where the cards are as much a piece of art as they are a piece of cardboard. You will find autographs, jerseys, cut signatures and more from the greatest players of the modern era and the greatest of all time.

In what might be the highest of the high-end product, Sterling offers Unique Relics and Unique Auto Relics. These rare items include Bat Knob, Autograph Bat Knob, Bat Nameplate, Autograph Bat Nameplate, Cut Signatures, Jersey Letter Patch, Legendary Relics, and Legendary Cut Signature Relics cards.

With retail prices hovering right around $1,000, this is a product to grab if you still have some Christmas money to spend.

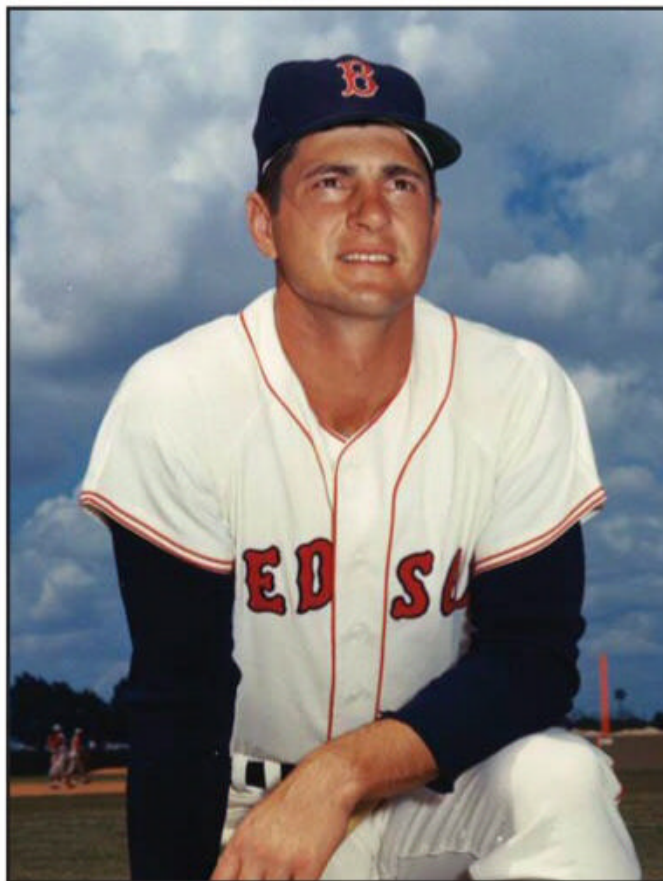

2020-21 PANINI FLAWLESS BASKETBALL

Panini Flawless is in the upper echelon of basketball releases for the entire year with 10 card boxes — make that briefcases — offering at least eight autographs, one relic and a diamond card.

In this particular product the only cards that are not signed offer a real gem embedded on the cards. Every single card are copies numbered to 20 or less.

There are three subsets, including Flawless Picks, that pair two top ballers with two diamonds embedded on the card.

As you would imagine, the product and checklist are filled with huge hits. The autographed options include Draft Champ Signatures and Flawless Finishes that include current and retired greats. Breathtaking auto relic offerings include Flawless Patch Autographs, Signature Prime Materials and Star Swatch Signatures.

You can also find high-end memorabilia pieces, including Championship Tags, Laundry Tags and Logoman offerings that are all coupled with signatures. The icing on the cake is the three-player triple Logoman cards.

The cards come in a briefcase and you will need one full of cash to purchase them.

2021 PANINI IMMACULATE COLLECTION FOOTBALL

Hitting the field on Jan. 14, one of the nicer football products is available late in the season. 2021 Immaculate offers six cards with five premium hits per box. The cards can consist of a combination of autographs and/or relics. The sixth card in the box is a base card.

Right out of the gate, the on-card rookie lineup offers Rookie Patch Autographs, Premium Patch Rookie Autographs and Immaculate Signature Patches, all numbered to 99 or less. You can secure some of the most desirable RPAs of rookies Mac Jones, Trevor Lawrence, Zach Wilson, Justin Fields and others.

Other auto relic offerings include Immaculate Number Rookie Patch Autographs and Immaculate Player's Collection Autographs.

There is a wide range of on-card autos, including Comeback Signatures, Hall of Fame Signatures, plus Immaculate Moments and Signature Moves.

Cleat Impressions focus on players' on-field kicks coupled with an on-card autograph.

New this season is a beautiful insert set called Name Plate and Ability Signatures. Name Plate showcases an oversized letter from a player's name plate covered with an acetate top and a signature. The set's breathtaking memorabilia inserts include Rookie Reserve, Brand Logo 1-of-1s, Laundry Tag 1-of-1s and Immaculate Dual NFL Shields.

New memorabilia offerings include Clearly Immaculate Rookie Jerseys and the interesting Gatorade Sideline Towels. You will also find jumbo versions of the memorabilia cards offering cleats, gloves, hats, helmets and other equipment.

This is a product for only serious collectors and it delivers in every possible way.

2021 PANINI PRIZM FOOTBALL

Rounding out an incredible sports card release month is quite possibly the most significant flagship card set with undeniable mass appeal. Prizm Football is not cheap with a price tag around $1,200 per hobby box. There are 12 cards per pack, 12 packs per box and 12 boxes per case.

Prizm has become the home of the flagship rookie card each and every season in various sports. The base set doubles 330 cards, including top veterans, legends and 110 of the aforementioned best rookies in the draft. Those rookie cards fall two per hobby pack.

There is also a wide range of parallels of each base card from the classic

Silver Prizms, Black, Gold Forest, Navy, Hyper and Orange all the way down to extremely rare, one-per-case Snakeskin Prizms.

You will find first-time inserts, including Prizm Break, New Recruits and an anime-inspired, super-rare Manga offering.

There are also short-printed inserts, including Illumination, Instant Impact and Stained Glass.

The wildly popular and elusive Color Blast makes its appearance again this season. Falling only one in every 10 cases, there will be a mad rush on this fan favorite insert.

There are a wide range of autographs and autographed parallels for rookies and veterans to round out the iconic yearly offering of Prizm.

Aside from the outstanding products mentioned above, there are a wide range of other releases in January and February, including 2021-2022 Upper Deck Hockey, 2021 Upper Deck AEW Wrestling, 2021 Panini National Treasures Racing NASCAR, 2021 Topps Chrome Formula 1 Racing, 2021 Topps Finest WWE Wrestling and more.

IN MEMORIAM

Honoring Hank Aaron, John Madden and other sports legends who passed on in 2021

BY JEFF OWENS

John Madden meant different things to different people during his four decades around professional football.

To football fans of the 1970s, he was one of the best head coaches in the game, leading the renegade Oakland Raiders to seven AFC titles and a Super Bowl victory following the 1976 season.

For 30 years, Madden was the most famous TV broadcaster in sports, using his colorful, unconventional style to educate and entertain millions of football fans and become a household name. Working for all four major TV networks, he won 16 Emmy Awards and called 11 Super Bowls.

And for millions of young fans, Madden was the face of EA Sports Madden NFL, the best-selling video game of all-time.

But despite his TV and pitchman success, Madden was first and foremost a football coach.

"People always ask, 'Are you a coach or a broadcaster or a video game guy?'" Madden said when he was selected for the Pro Football Hall of Fame in 2006. "I'm a coach, always been a coach."

Madden passed away on Dec. 28 at age 85.

Three days later, the sports world lost another legendary coach in Dan Reeves, who died on Jan. 1 at age 77. Reeves participated in nine Super Bowls as a player and coach. After playing in three Super Bowls for the Dallas Cowboys, he led the Broncos to three Super Bowl appearances and the Falcons to one as a head coach.

Madden and Reeves are part of a long list of notable sports figures who passed away in 2021, including baseball Hall of Famers Hank Aaron, Don Sutton, Phil Niekro and Tommy Lasorda, football Hall of Famers Floyd Little and Claude Humphrey and Basketball Hall of Famers Elgin Baylor and Paul Westphal.

Aaron, one of the greatest players of all time, died on Jan. 22, nine months before his beloved Atlanta Braves won the World Series. Baseball's home run king, who was still part of the Braves organization, was honored throughout the 2021 World Series. He was 86.

Niekro, who won 316 games as a big-league pitcher, also played for the Braves, while Sutton, who won 324 games, most with the Los Angeles Dodgers, was a longtime radio broadcaster for the Braves. While in Los Angeles, Sutton pitched for Lasorda, who led the Dodgers to two World Series victories in his 20 years as manager.

Little, a member of the College and Pro Football Hall of Fame, was a three-time All-American at Syracuse before becoming a star running back for the Denver Broncos. When he retired in 1975, he was the NFL's seventh all-time leading rusher with 6,323 yards and 54 touchdowns. He was 78.

Humphrey, 77, was an All-Pro defensive end for the Atlanta Falcons and Philadelphia Eagles. He played in the Pro Bowl six times and was named first-team All-Pro five times.

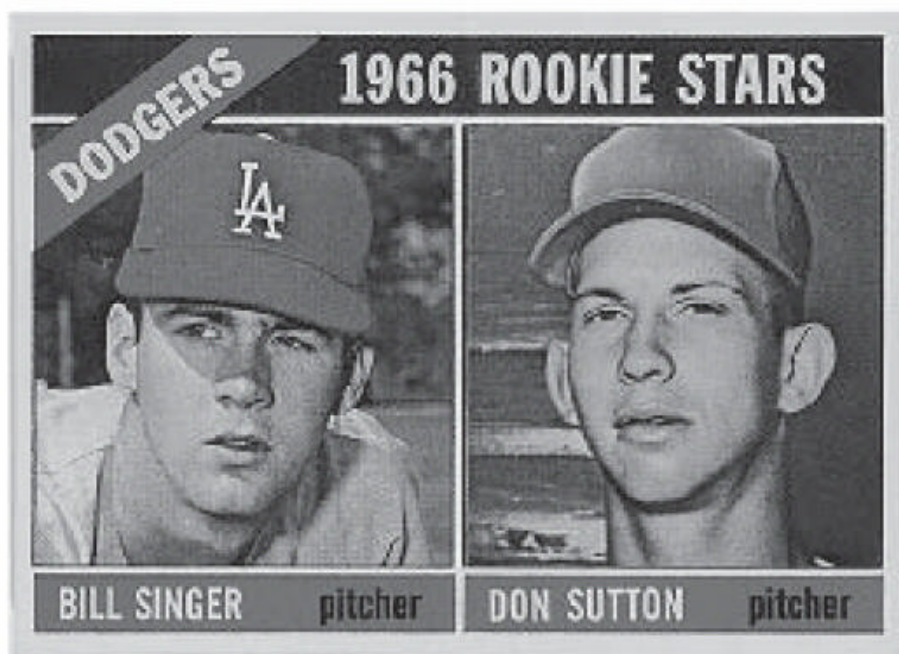

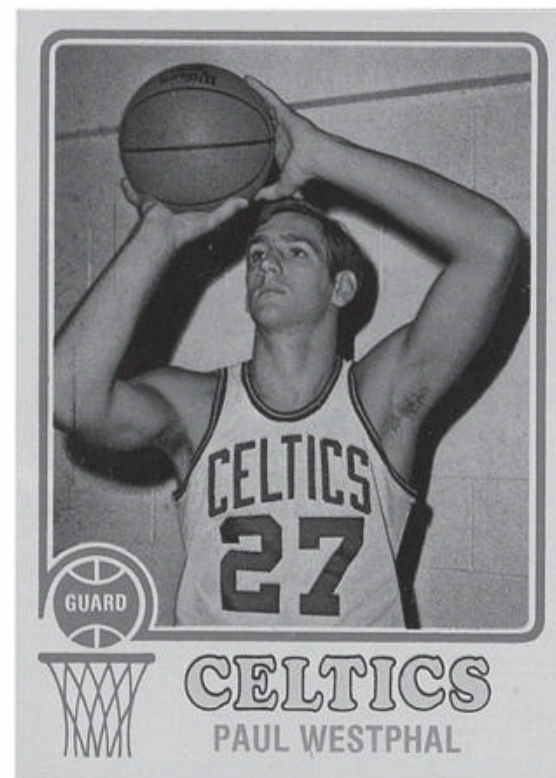

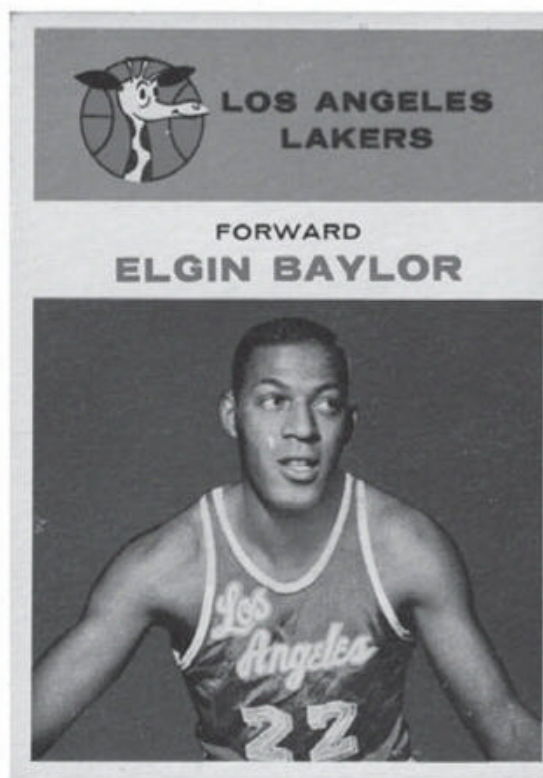

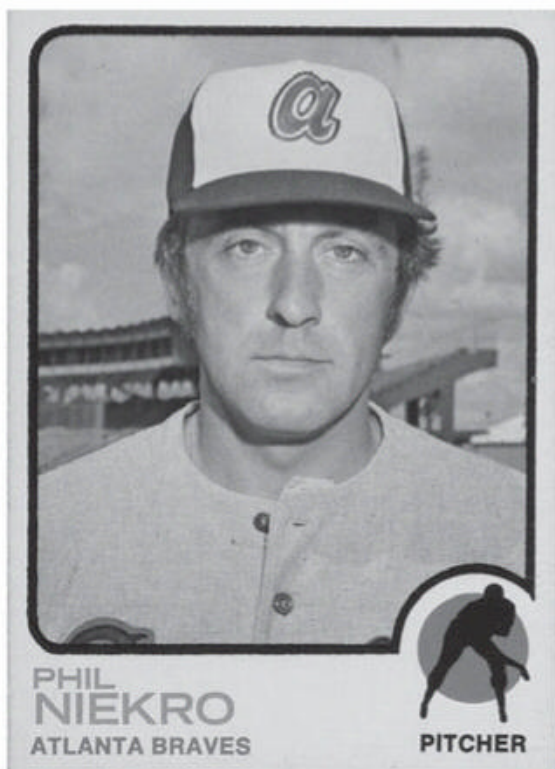

Baylor, 86, played for 14 seasons with the NBA's Minneapolis/Los Angeles Lakers, where he was an 11-time All-Star. He was named one of the NBA's 50 Greatest Players and to the 75th Anniversary team. He spent 22 years as GM of the Los Angeles

Clippers and was named NBA Executive of the Year in 2006.

Westphal, 70, played in the NBA from 1972-84, winning an NBA championship with the Boston Celtics in 1974. The five-time all-star also reached the 1976 NBA finals with the Phoenix Suns. After his playing career, Westphal coached in the NBA from 1988-2000, leading the Suns to the 1993 NBA finals.

HOBBY PIONEERS

Honoring more early collectors who laid the foundation for the sports collectibles industry

BY GEORGE VRECHEK

In Part 1 of this article (Jan. 1, 2022 issue), I started to organize the pioneer sports card collectors I have written about in SCD. I started with brief bios for collectors born before 1920.

Part 2 covers collectors born between 1920 and 1939. Since I have only listed collectors I have written about previously, readers are encouraged to report other candidates (born before 1940) who contributed significantly to the hobby for an “update set.”

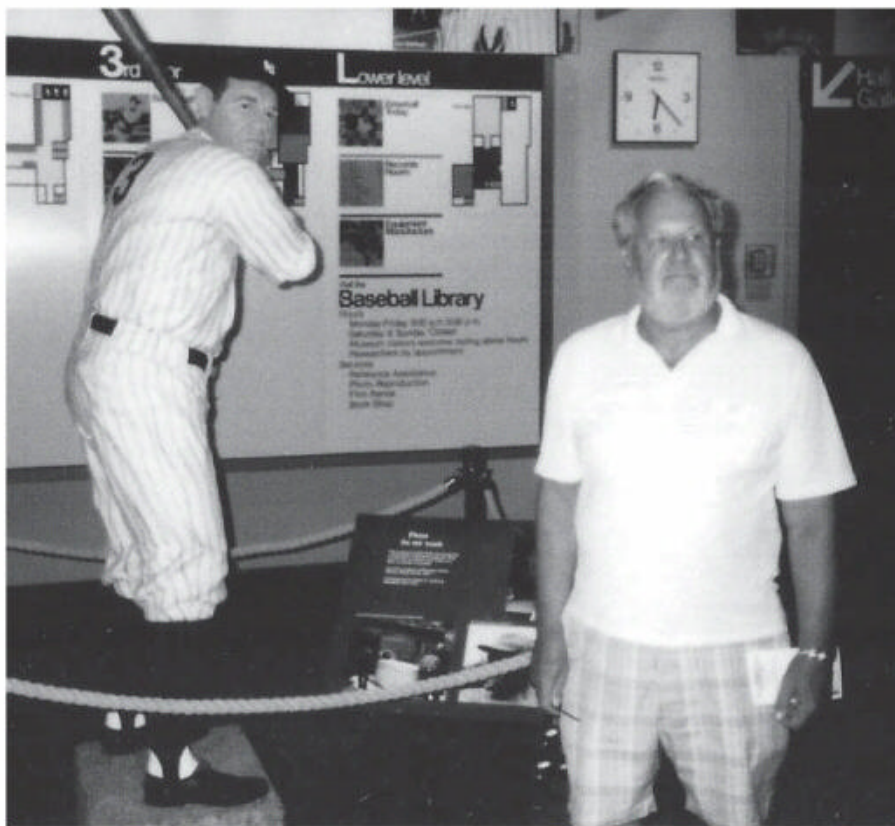

1920-1982 BOB JASPERSEN

Jaspersen was a four-sport high school athlete in Wisconsin who became a sportswriter in St. Paul, Minn. and Philadelphia. Jaspersen contracted tuberculosis in 1939 and spent the next two years in hospitals or sanitariums. While in isolation, he wrote about sports cards and guides and tried to find other collectors with a one-page newsletter called “Bill and Bob’s.”

In 1951, he started Sport Fan, one of the first publications directed toward the sports card collector, and published Sport Fan Who's Who directories in the 1950s. He wrote with enthusiasm and humor. He attended and reported on the first gatherings of collectors in the late 1960s and early 1970s and kept Sport Fan going, with some interruptions, until 1977. His son Mike Jaspersen and grandson Nick have continued in the business of sports cards.

1920-2013 RAY HESS

Hess attended Babe Ruth's last game as a Boston Brave against the Philadelphia Phillies in 1935, a year in which the Phillies drew all of 205,470 fans to the Baker Bowl. Hess and his buddies could find plenty of good open seats and watched Ruth hit three long ones over the 60-foot-high right field wall — in batting practice.

Hess moved to California in 1941. In 1958, he was presented with a big box of Bell Brand Dodgers by a grocery store supplier, which helped him corner that market. He attended the first shows at Jim Nowell's house in Brea, Calif. in 1969 and 1970 and became friends with stadium postcard collector Ray Medeiros.

Hess once bought a T206 Honus Wagner for $150, which Lionel Carter had taken a pass on as being too pricey. He sold much of his extensive collection to long-time friend Don Ortolani (born 1939).

1922-1994 FRANK NAGY

Nagy loved to collect cards in quantity, such as Walt Corson's collection, which had grown to 400,000 cards by the time Nagy purchased it in 1966 for $4,000. The Corson purchase stretched his finances and the shocks on his Oldsmobile.

He was involved in the earliest Detroit area shows and joined Charles Brooks in publishing Sport Hobbyist magazine. From 1963 to 1967 Sport Hobbyist produced clearly marked reprints of famous cards from Nagy's own collection. He auctioned his duplicates and stored everything in his basement. He didn't mind spending money on cards, or that prices were increasing. He wanted to obtain at least one card from every known set.

Nagy was known as a shrewd trader, a nice guy and a valued mentor.

1921-2010 HAROLD ESCH

Each started collecting in 1933 and was a Wagner and Plank short of completing the T206s. He was a hobby writer starting with a column in the Trading Post in 1946. He was quite the lawn bowler as well.

1922-2007 HARRY LILIEN

Lilien was just a kid when he and his brother Sid started trading cards with Carter and Jefferson Burdick. In 1938, he became the 47th subscriber to Burdick's Card Collector's Bulletin. By 1940 he was researching and reporting on tobacco issues in CCB.

He went off to war and collecting was put on hold, but, like Carter, he still got his CCBs. In 1948 he was back at it, helping form the Cigarette Card Collectors Society with Lawrence Kurzrok in New York City. He then dropped out of collecting until returning in the 1970s.

Mr. Mint Al Rosen bought Harry and Sid's collection and called it one of the finest conditioned collections he had ever purchased. Rosen's humorous account of the purchase described how the Liliens didn't just lay all their cards on the kitchen table but would emerge with cards in spurts out of a mysterious back room. It took Rosen eight or nine visits to buy what he could. Rosen said that he offered the Liliens $200 just to look into the back room.

1923-2014 SY BERGER

Sy Berger told me, "I was never a collector. I was a gatherer." Nonetheless, no hobby history can neglect to mention Berger.

Following WW II, Berger returned to Bucknell to finish his last year of college. He became friends with Joel Shorin, son of Phil Shorin with Topps. Joel Shorin persuaded

Berger to join him in the family business at Topps.

Berger quickly got things done, signing players to appear on Topps cards and making friends with players, owners, league presidents and clubhouse people. He worked with Woody Gelman to produce the first of many successful Topps products, the 1952 Topps Baseball set.

Berger was a great interviewee with a non-stop stream of interesting stories. With the help of his family, I wrote about his life in the Sept. 19, 2014 issue of SCD. He died Dec. 14, 2014.

Solon's childhood memories of collecting Goudeys were rekindled in the 1950s when, as a teacher, one of his high school students showed him some cards. Solon got back into collecting quickly.

He visited Carter when Buck Barker and Charles Bray came to Chicago in 1958. They sat around Carter's kitchen table talking and trading cards. Solon visited Chicago-area card manufacturers like Exhibit Supply Company. When the well ran dry on new sets, he and a few friends created their own with some 1969 and 1970 non-licensed issues with made-up names like LaPizza Royale and Fud's Photography.

Despite selling the bulk of his collection in 1979, he retained his enthusiasm for baseball, putting together new sets and talking and writing about collecting and baseball.

1926-2010 RAY BILLBROUGH

Billbrough, of Flushing, Mich., had a bio in Lerner's Who's Who. Like many collectors, he was in his early 30s before he resumed collecting in 1958. He had accumulated 25,000 cards by 1970.

Around 1953, he worked in a sporting goods store that sold baseball gloves. Inserted with the gloves were five or six baseball cards. Billbrough wound up with 2,750 of the cards. He carefully selected a run of 97 cards and destroyed the rest. He mentions that they were burned, "which is the way our family handled 'recycling' paper products at the time. We had a wire basket near the alley to use for such torching."

Sy Berger handled the dumping of cases of unsold 1952 Topps high numbers into the ocean. The 2,653 cards leftover, which Billbrough burned, were also 1952 Topps high numbers. I'll guess there were about 54 mint double-printed Mantles in the fire. Oh, well.

1928 FRANK KEETZ

Keetz, from Schenectady, NY, started collecting in the late 1930s and dealt with most of the hobby pioneers. He discovered the hobby again and attended a 1970 show run by Gelman. "One thing led to another," Keetz confessed as he went antiquing.

Keetz gravitated into a niche of sport cards, comic postcards and tobacco inserts. His initial attraction was their affordability and history. Keetz taught high school history and social studies. He has written the book, so to speak, having put together five guides on these postcards.

He still had a table at his local show until the pandemic hit.

1931-2001 JOHN STOMMEN

Stommen, of Milan, Mich., started Sports Collectors Digest in 1973. Several new hobby publications emerged in the 1970s and Stommen was likely the oldest of the publishers at age 43. His sons were collectors and helped produce SCD, initially from the family's kitchen table.

The Stommens also ran the local newspaper and an agricultural radio network. He sold SCD to Chet Krause in 1981. The Trader Speaks was sold to SCD in 1983.

1931-2021 BILL LOUGHMAN

Loughman, of Elmhurst, Ill., collected cards, but also had a penchant for finding old sports sections and photos. During his airline piloting days, he would look for opportunities to pick up unwanted accumulations from media companies looking to purge their archives.

He also visited “Goodie” Goldfaden, Barker, Gelman and other hobby pioneers. He still had a few piles of pulp when I last talked to him in early 2021.

1934-2021 RAY MEDEIROS

Ray Medeiros was responsible for putting me in touch with several veteran collectors. Medeiros always connected with people in the hobby as a collector, store operator, publisher, show organizer, collector of Ted Williams articles and an expert on stadium postcards and photographs.

Medeiros started collecting Playballs in 1941. He discovered newspapers from 1891 to 1943 in an abandoned home in Fall River, Mass. and organized and preserved the sports sections.

Medeiros spent 13 years in the Air Force in such far-off posts as Greenland and Morocco, yet managed to connect with Goldfaden, Frank Jock, Howard Leheup and Buck Barker during that era. Collector Mel Bailey (born in 1933) was a fellow soldier who became a friend. Hess, Jaspersen and Medeiros became friends as well, and all attended Jim Nowell’s 1970 hobby gathering.

Medeiros helped organize several “Stadiapex” meetings where stadium postcard collectors could buy, sell, trade and chat. He created a set of postcards called Way Back When, featuring old ballparks. He wrote me, “Careful, collecting stadium postcards is like eating peanuts — once you start, it’s hard to stop.”

Ray passed away on Oct. 5, 2021 in Colorado Springs. His daughter, Anne Marshall, wrote me about a tour of Fenway Park with her dad, “I remember being in awe of my dad ... as I observed the ease with which he interacted with strangers and friends, sharing his data bank of knowledge, jumping from subject to subject: ballparks, ball players, ball trivia, time and again. He was truly happy being with others who loved the sport and its history as much as he did.”

1935 BILL WHITE

Bill White wrote me that he keeps a low profile, but White’s name pops up frequently in the history of the hobby. He started collecting in the late 1940s.

Bob Thing, Dan Even and White maintained a master checklist of the Philadelphia Phillies. White wrote me last year about his late friend Irv Lerner: “I lived in the Philadelphia suburbs and Irv came out to the house early in his collecting days, and I kind of flabbergasted him with the collection I’d made by that time. We became pretty good friends, went out to dinner at many of the shows we attended, and he and his family came down to our place in Ocean City, New Jersey for the couple of years that Bob Schmierer had a show on the Music Pier there.”

1936-2007 LARRY FRITSCH

Fritsch went from an avid, young collector to one of the earliest full-time dealers — Larry Fritsch Cards. Fritsch bought collections, bid in auctions and bought cases directly from manufacturers. Thousands of Topps high-numbered 1972 football cards came his way via a purchase late in the season.

He advertised extensively and published a catalog which distinguished prices for different card conditions and for stars when such distinctions were not common. His prices could be robust; he had his own feeling for values and contributed his knowledge to the SCD price guides. He also produced collector issues with reprints of old sets or new concepts like the “One Year Wonders.”

On my way through Wisconsin in 1982, I stopped at his store, located behind his house outside Stevens Point. His “store” was a warehouse for his millions of cards, and he wasn’t really set up to deal with a few obscure cards at a time from a collector’s want list. I must have looked disappointed as I returned to my car empty handed. Fritsch came hustling after me and gave me a handful of cards that he thought I might like. It was a nice gesture.

1936-2020 IRV LERNER

As a kid in Philadelphia, Lerner had a good source for mint cards. His dad ran a cigar store that sold cards. By the time baseball cards appeared after WW II, Lerner was old enough to keep them in good shape.

He reentered the hobby in 1959 and met nearby collector Bill White. He bought cards from Goldfaden, Gelman, Fritsch and Bruce Yeko. He collected and reported on variations, and he thought about ways to connect with collectors. His solution was to publish "Who's Who in Card Collecting" in 1970 and 1971, which remains a great source for information on many early collectors.

Lerner took a table at each National Convention to sell his accumulation of cards in great condition.

1937 DOUG MCWILLIAMS

I have written about Doug McWilliams' experience in photographing athletes, but he has also been a significant collector. Along with neighbor Dick Dobbins (born 1934), he had a particular interest in cards from teams in the San Francisco Bay area. His efforts to photograph players from the stands led him from the Oakland Oaks to the Oakland A's and producing postcards for sensational rookie Vida Blue.

McWilliams' work caught the eye of Topps and he was hired to photograph players in the 1970s and '80s at Spring Training in Arizona. He produced postcards for primarily Oakland players to use for fan correspondence in the 1970s and '80s.

SABR selected McWilliams as the winner of the 2021 Jefferson Burdick Award, commenting on "his willingness to pull back the curtain and show us the process of how photographs end up on cards."

1938-2020 LLOYD TOERPE

As he reported in Ballcard Collector published by George Martin (born 1939), Toerpe was among the organizers of a gathering of 10 collectors in October 1969. Like a progressive dinner, the group moved on from Toerpe's home in Flint, Mich. to the home of two other collectors. The group morphed into the early Detroit-area shows, which drew nearly 500 people by 1971.

Toerpe was interested in cards, photos and publications. He quickly got back to the tobacco inserts, regionals as well as current sets. He collected guides and NFL Record Manuals.

1939 GAR MILLER

Miller started collecting 1949 Bowmans while living across the river from Philadelphia in New Jersey. In 1953 he inherited his father's tobacco card collection. Unfortunately, he sold several cards for 20 cents each, including a Ty Cobb. However, he kept collecting through high school and buying cards advertised in Grandstand Manager and the Sport Hobbyist.

Miller played baseball and basketball in college. In the Army he was stationed in New York City and assigned to write publicity. He got to meet Jackie Robinson.

Just about the time he thought he might sell his collection, he met Lerner and jumped back in. He got to the early 1970s shows, went on buying trips and wrote a 1973 book "Baseball Cards." Miller said that he collected what came his way. He continues to stay involved, still running ads in SCD and selling vintage baseball and football cards.

1939 DWIGHT CHAPIN

Chapin started collecting in 1948 in Lewiston, Idaho. He retained his interest in cards, autographs, sports and writing about sports. His Ty Cobb autograph came directly from Cobb. The widows of Babe Ruth and Christy Mathewson sent him canceled checks signed by their husbands.

His career as a West Coast sportswriter spanned from 1956 to 2005. He met other California hobby people, including Goldfaden, Medeiros, Nowell, Mike Berkus and Steve Brunner. His 1974 article about sports cards while he was with the Los Angeles Times made national news and did much to boost the visibility of the hobby.

He sold his cards through Lew Lipset 25 years ago. He lives in Mill Valley, Calif.

OTHERS

This listing only includes collectors I have previously mentioned in articles. Many others also appear frequently in hobby literature such as: Bob Rolfe (born 1921), Charles Blazina (1923), Vic Witte (1931), Tom Collier (1932), Roland Villard (1934), Ron Menchine (1934), Lee Temanson (1938), Tom Reid (1938), John Fawcett, Owen Ricker and Barry Halper (all 1939).

In addition to collectors mentioned in hobby publications, many others were less visible. Maybe they just liked to read about the hobby. Maybe their mothers never tossed out their cards and they didn't have to recapture their childhood collections by advertising or trading. Maybe they didn't know there was anyone else interested in old cardboard. You can't assume that there weren't others with significant collections. People don't like to advertise that they have Honus Wagner cards in their dens.

YOUNGSTERS

Names come to mind of others who were in the hobby for what seems like forever. However, many were born too recently to be included in Part 2.

Those born in the 1940s (to the best of my information) include: Bruce Yeko, Pat Quinn, Charles Brooks, John Thom, Bob Schmierer, Jim Beckett, Rich Egan, Steve Mitchell, Ted Taylor, Mike Aronstein, Jack Smalling, John England, Len Brown, Bob Thing, Eric Lange, Dan Even, Fred McKie, Jack Urban, Roger Neufeldt, Lew Lipset, Bill Haber, Bob Schulhof, Jim Nowell, Jim Zak, Gavin Riley, Gary Cyprus, Charles Brooks, George Husby, John Rumierz, Jay Barry, Dan Dischley, Al Rosen, Paul Marchant, B.A. Murry, Roger Marth, Collector Dwight Chapin in the 1980s.

Don Steinbach, Barry Newman, Dick Reuss, Jim McConnell and all those who I haven't had a chance to write about — yet.

I guarantee I have missed naming some other collectors born before 1950 who have been prominent in the hobby. I apologize in advance for the omissions.

WITNESSING DRAMATIC GROWTH

I don't believe any of the individuals featured in Part 2 had ever met Jefferson Burdick. However, many had contact with other early pioneers like Corson, Carter, Barker, Goldfaden and Gammon. Several were sportswriters, and most of them wrote for hobby publications.

They lived from coast to coast (plus Greenland and Morocco). They collected the "recent" gum cards as kids and as young adults witnessed the growth of the hobby and the emergence of shows and publications. During the span of their collecting years, prices increased dramatically, card condition and third-party grading became factors and the internet emerged. They kept collecting through it all and have had interesting stories to tell.

MIRACLES ON CARDBOARD

These Olympic trading cards make the gold medal round for many collectors

BY DOUG KOZTOSKI

Imagine trying to outmaneuver a grizzly bear while balancing on ice skates. That's kind of what the USA Hockey team did in the 1980 Winter Olympics when they went ahead 4-3 in a medal round game against the heavily favored Soviet Union squad.

The memorable fourth goal came off the stick of U.S. team captain and left winger Mike Eruzione.

As the final seconds ticked off the clock, TV announcer Al Michaels uttered some of the most famous words in sports broadcast history: "Do you believe in miracles? YES!" And with that the USA team celebrated the victory known as the "Miracle on Ice."

In 1999 Sports Illustrated named the "Miracle" as the top sports moment of the 20th century. The USA Hockey team later beat Finland for the 1980 gold medal, but that game (and outcome) seemed anti-climactic for many fans after stunning the Soviets.

Who knows what, if any, "miracles" will take place in the 2022 Winter Olympics, which kick off in Beijing, China on Feb. 4, but a few trading cards will likely be made to celebrate some of the action.

Olympic trading cards have a limited place in the sports memorabilia hobby, but a few of them stem from the "Miracle," including some in the 1980 Topps Hockey issue and the 1991 Impel brand set. Of the actual 1980 Olympics U.S. Hockey game action, the 1991 Impel issue wins the battle between those offerings.

Perhaps most notably in the "Miracle" grouping is a handful of 1983-84 collections with Eruzione in sets known as Greatest Olympians (one version with the Olympic rings logo in the upper left-hand corner, the other with a "Stars in Motion" design in that same spot) and Olympic Heroes (available in an M&M's mail-in offer). Sometimes goaltender Jim Craig, also a huge part of the 1980 U.S. Hockey team’s success, appears in those sets.

The 1983 M&M’s issue, much like the Greatest Olympians sets, also gives collectors a wide range of Olympic standouts, among them Babe Didrikson, Bruce Jenner, Jesse Owens, Wilma Rudolph, Jim Thorpe and, from the 1960 U.S. class, one Cassius Clay (Muhammad Ali). Many of the cards in the M&M’s set commonly sell for $5-7 in raw and near-mint condition, while the Clay card in similar shape has recently sold in the $22-49 range. Meanwhile, a PSA 10 of Jenner, the 1976 decathlon champ, from the issue snagged $170 in a late 2021 auction.

In that same era, one of the most popular baseball cards with Olympic ties comes from the 1985 Topps issue: Mark McGwire. The former slugger still generates some pop as a few PSA 10 samples of that card sold in 2021 in the range of $2,200 to $3,500 each.

Michael Jordan cards from the 1992 “Dream Team” are among the top sellers among Olympic cards.

THE DREAM TEAM

But the main draw of the period in our international spotlight originates from the 1984-85 Star Company hoops Olympic subset: Michael Jordan. One collector warned about encountering counterfeits of this Jordan card, so doing your homework to dodge the fakes is key, but there are some real graded samples on the market, with BGS being the slabs one would normally see them in. Expect a price tag north of $700 for even a BGS 6 version of this card.

A couple of Summer Olympics after his mid-80s appearance, Michael Jordan returned to the international arena with a few high-profile friends, including Magic Johnson and Larry Bird, to shore up the “Dream Team.” That basketball squad, like in 1984, also delivered gold. The 1991-92 NBA Hoops and Skybox sets of the “Dream Team” still command much collector interest. High-grade examples of those cards easily bring hundreds of dollars.

OLYMPIC LEGENDS

Logan Ward owns Olympic cards from several eras, a blend of athletes he admires and even a few legendary Olympic broadcasters. “Some are current athletes, some from my childhood (1960s-70s) and some are of the legendary competitors before my time,” Ward said.

One of his prime cards in this grouping: a PSA 10 of the Topps 2012 USA Olympics card of swimming legend Michael Phelps.

“It is from the 2012 Topps U.S. Olympic Team set. I wanted to have a PSA-graded copy of his card since he was the one that broke Mark Spitz’s record of seven Gold medals (in 1972), winning eight Gold medals in Beijing in 2008,” Ward said.

A Spitz card from the 1977-79 Sportscaster issue also lives in Ward’s collection, as does a 1939 British (Churchman’s) tobacco card of sprinter Jesse Owens, who starred at the 1936 Games in Berlin. Ward noted that Olympic cards of athletes in various sports have experienced blossoming interest, including Owens, since the COVID pandemic hit.

“I would say his popularity has surged at least tenfold in the last 18 months,” Ward said.

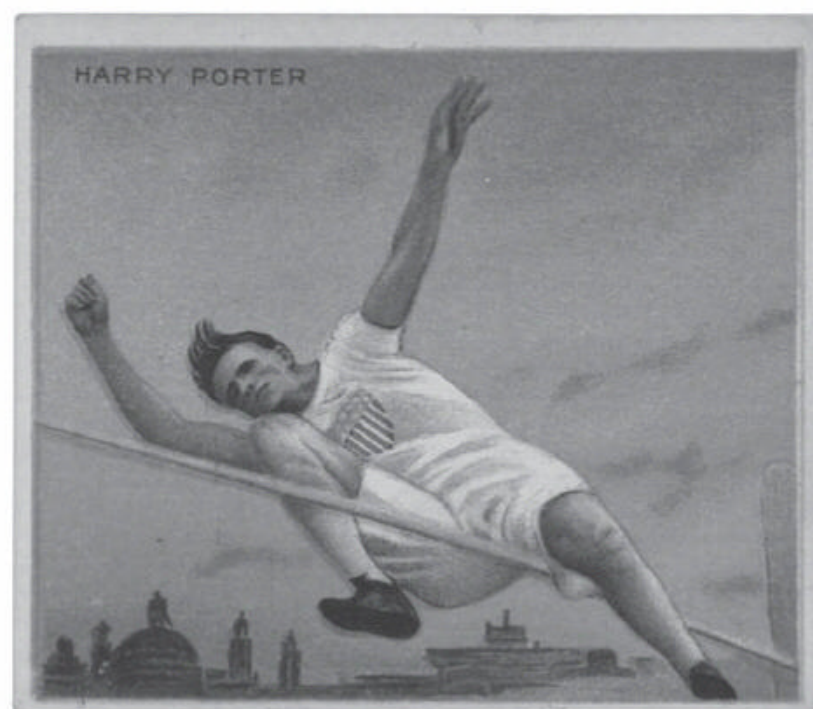

Jim Bingaman, a leading Owens collector on the PSA Set Registry, registers a virtual photo finish of that philosophy.

“If you look at the prices some of the early Owens cards have been fetching, in my opinion, Olympic cards are finally starting to take off,” said Bingaman, who attributed some of the swell to “more collectors looking for cards of their favorite Olympic athlete.”

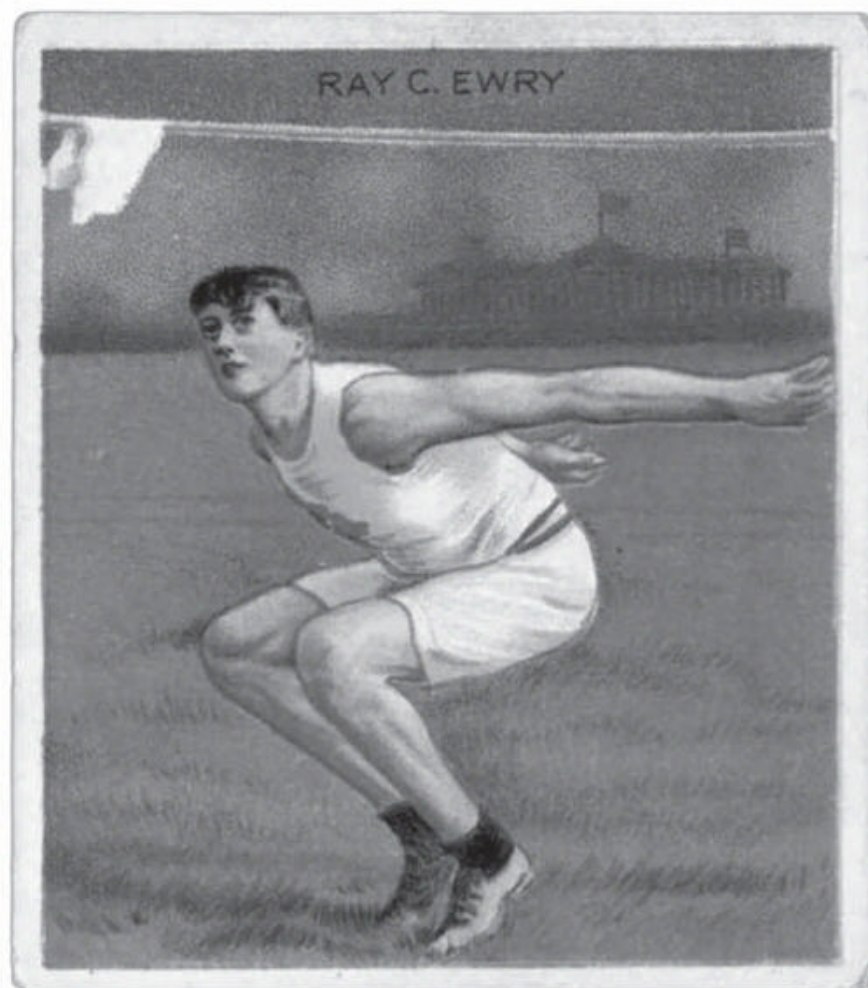

Whether they are from 1936 or soon after, some Owens pasteboards easily snatch sale prices of hundreds of dollars — and often in the thousands if in high grade and slabbed. Among those are the “Champions of 1936” British tobacco cards put out by Ogden’s as well as Hignett Brothers.

Shortly before Owens and his U.S. Track teammates made history, the 1933 Goudey Sports Kings offering included a couple of cards with tremendous collector interest that encompass an Olympic connection: Jim Thorpe and Babe Didrikson.

Both of those 1933 cards mention the athlete’s Olympic history, although each later made a bigger name for themselves in other sports: Thorpe (football) and Didrikson (golf). The Didrikson card landing in the rare high-numbered series also increases its value. Each of those cards from the classic Sports Kings set commonly sell for several hundreds of dollars apiece, even in poor and raw condition.

SETTING THE BAR HIGH

In the vintage Olympic trading cards discussion, one has to include the T218 collection, which represents several sports and debuted in 1910.

“The T218 set is considered by most as the first true ‘Olympic set’ because so many of the athletes participated in the 1900, 1904, 1908 and 1912 Olympic Games,” collector Jeff Copeland said.

Copeland fell in love with this tobacco issue “at first sight” in the early 1980s. “It’s a beautiful set and a good challenge (due to hundreds of variations),” he said.

Many T218s in average shape and unslabbed can be found in the $8-15 range.

Two of Copeland’s favorite Olympians in the T218s are Harry Porter and Ray Ewry. The hobbyist finds the Porter one of the most captivating cards in the offering “showing Harry leaping over the bar while doing the running high jump.” In that event in 1908 Porter parked himself at the podium’s pinnacle.

Copeland noted that Ewry, another “jumper,” was one of the most successful Olympic athletes of all time. He won eight gold medals in three standing events — high jump, long jump and triple jump — across the 1900, 1904 and 1908 games, a record that stood for decades.

“The really interesting part about Ewry is he had polio as a kid and was in a wheelchair until almost a teenager,” Copeland said. “Through pure determination he worked himself into shape and became one of the best Olympic stars ever.” Overcoming those obstacles, many would say, certainly qualifies Ewry as another Olympic “miracle.”

CHASING AUTOGRAPHS AT OLYMPIC STADIUM

Old Montreal Expos ballpark was a paradise for autograph seekers

BY CLAYTON TRUTOR

Multipurpose stadiums get a bad rap. And often for good reason. Whether it's Philadelphia's Veterans Stadium or Pittsburgh's Three Rivers Stadium or Minneapolis' HHH Metrodome, the self-appointed guardians of each of the major professional sports have cultivated a thoroughly negative public memory of these venues.

The purists present these places as cookie cutter and inhuman in scale. Built on the cheap. Fans too far from the players. Equally ill-suited to all athletic pursuits.

These complaints are certainly true in almost every instance (though I would argue in the age of municipal stadium financing that expecting taxpayers to support one facility rather than two outweighs any aesthetic arguments against multipurpose venues).

One place where it wasn't true, at least not entirely, was at Montreal's Olympic Stadium.

Sure, the structure looked like some kind of low-rent Death Star in a straight-to-video "Star Wars" knockoff. "The Big O" didn't offer a picture-postcard, "When it Was a Game" view of baseball or football, its two primary uses. Construction costs had overrun by roughly a billion dollars Canadian and the building never seemed quite finished. Chunks of the roof came loose from time to time. The stadium's cement corridors had all the charm of a North Korean prison.

Nevertheless, Olympic Stadium offered fans an intimacy with the players I have not experienced at another ballpark. This was a product of both the design of the playing field and the efforts of the Expos to create a fan-friendly ballpark experience.

Growing up in Northern Vermont, a trip to Montreal was roughly a 90-minute journey each way, depending on the border. My family crossed the border several times each summer in the early- to mid-'90s to see the Expos. We were resolutely a Red Sox family and went to Fenway on a number of occasions but getting to "The Big O" was cheaper, easier and usually more fun.

We'd arrive at Olympic Stadium hours before the game. My father would head to the ticket office and buy seats down the first or third base lines for the cost of two bleacher seats at Fenway. As soon as we worked our way through the stadium's narrow corridors, my brother and I would venture down to the bullpens. The "Big O's" dangerous bullpens, which sat entirely exposed to the on-field action down the lines, were a honey hole for autograph seekers.

For several hours before each game, hundreds of fans crowded around the baseline bullpens. They held aloft balls and cards and whatever the team was giving away that day, shouting in English and French at the players who milled in the area. Whether we were near the home or visitor's bullpen, the autographs were abundant. One time, I saw a guy get a slew of Los Angeles Dodgers autographs on an Expos logo-shaped Jell-O mold they were giving away that afternoon.

Lee Smith, Ken Hill, Vince Coleman, Frank Tanana, Mel Stottlemyre, Joe Carter, Tim Wallach, Youppi — I got all the big names to sign for me near the bullpens.

My biggest thrill came on Oct. 3, 1993 when my favorite Expo, Dennis Martinez, signed my ball on what turned out to be his last day in a Montreal uniform.

My brother had a specialty all his own — he had a knack for convincing big leaguers to give him baseballs. One time when Montreal was playing the Mets, Expos lefty Chris Nabholz walked past about 50 other kids and handed him a ball. Nabholz announced to the crowd that he gave my brother the ball because he was polite (he called him "Mr. Nabholz") and was the only kid wearing an Expos hat. The rest of the assembly consisted of 7-year-old smart alecks in Mets caps who had made family trips from New York on a holiday weekend. (Many were there for hours yelling "give me a ball." One particularly assertive kid implored Delino Deshields to "get your ass over here.")

During the games, when players took turns standing watch for screaming line-drives near the bullpen, fans continued to collect signatures and National League baseballs from bored pitchers who sat against the short wall that separated the field from the stands.

I recall a game against the Marlins in the summer of '93 when I watched enviously from 10 rows back as Charlie Hough was signing autographs in his bullpen chair. I was about to ask my mom if I could go down and try to get the old knuckleballer's autograph when a bullet came off Gary Sheffield's bat. Luckily for Hough and the rotten kids who were horning in on my action, the ball sailed over their heads. Unfortunately for the woman walking down the aisle with four Molsons, four Lafleur hotdogs and four Styrofoam cups of poutine, the ball struck her in the forehead. After medical personnel had checked her out and taken her away for treatment, I walked down to see if Hough was still signing (he wasn't) and what her order at the concession stand had been. Thankfully, the woman wound up being fine. The next night, Randy Tieman, CTV Montreal's late, great sportscaster, noted that the woman had been discharged from a nearby hospital after a night of observation.

On Sundays, the Expos hosted autograph days. This wasn't some 25th man on the roster-type gimmick either. For two hours before Sunday matinees, two players signed and shook hands outside the team's gift shop. Inevitably, one of the two players signing was a marquee name. I got autographs from Hall of Famers Gary Carter and Larry Walker this way as well as a host of other prominent Expos of the era.

As a young man preoccupied with collecting autographs, the games often seemed a bit anti-climactic at Olympic Stadium, the second act to the close-quarters hunt that proceeded the on-field action.

Nevertheless, those Saturdays and Sundays at Olympic Stadium with the Montreal Expos and my family are my fondest memories of attending a professional sporting event.

THE COBRA

Dave Parker talks autographs, heroes and signing baseball's first $1 million contract

Pirates star Dave Parker takes a swing against the Chicago Cubs at Wrigley Field in the 1970s. (PHOTO CREDIT: FOCUS ON SPORT/GETTY IMAGES)

Baseball was an integral part of Dave Parker's life from a very young age. Growing up in Cincinnati near Crosley Field, the young Parker learned to play the game in the stadium's parking lot.

By 1973, the big, powerful outfielder was playing inside major league stadiums.

Parker's career started in 1973 as a member of the Pittsburgh Pirates, where he excelled for more than a decade.

During his time in Pittsburgh, Parker pieced together a career worthy of Hall of Fame consideration as he won back-to-back National League batting titles in 1977-78. He was named the National League's Most Valuable Player in 1978 and was a member of the Pirates last World Series championship team in 1979. The Cobra also became Major League Baseball's first million dollar per year player just one year prior to leading the Pirates to the World Series title.

Parker was part of a run of legendary players at Pittsburgh's Three Rivers Stadium as he followed in the footsteps of Hall of Famers Roberto Clemente and Willie Stargell. Parker was a Pirates fan favorite for an entire generation of fans.

After his time in Pittsburgh, Parker played key roles for the Cincinnati Reds, Oakland A's, Milwaukee Brewers, California Angels and Toronto Blue Jays before retiring in 1991.

"The Cobra" finished his storied career as a seven-time All-Star, two-time World Series champion, the 1978 National League MVP, a three-time Gold Glove award winner, three-time Silver Slugger Award winner, two-time National League batting champion and a member of the Reds Hall of Fame.

In this exclusive interview, Tony Reid chatted with Parker about signing his first baseball card deal, his trophy room, following in Clemente and Stargell's footsteps and revolutionizing the salary scale in professional baseball.

When a player is asked for an autograph for the first time it's a special moment. Do you remember the first time you signed your autograph?

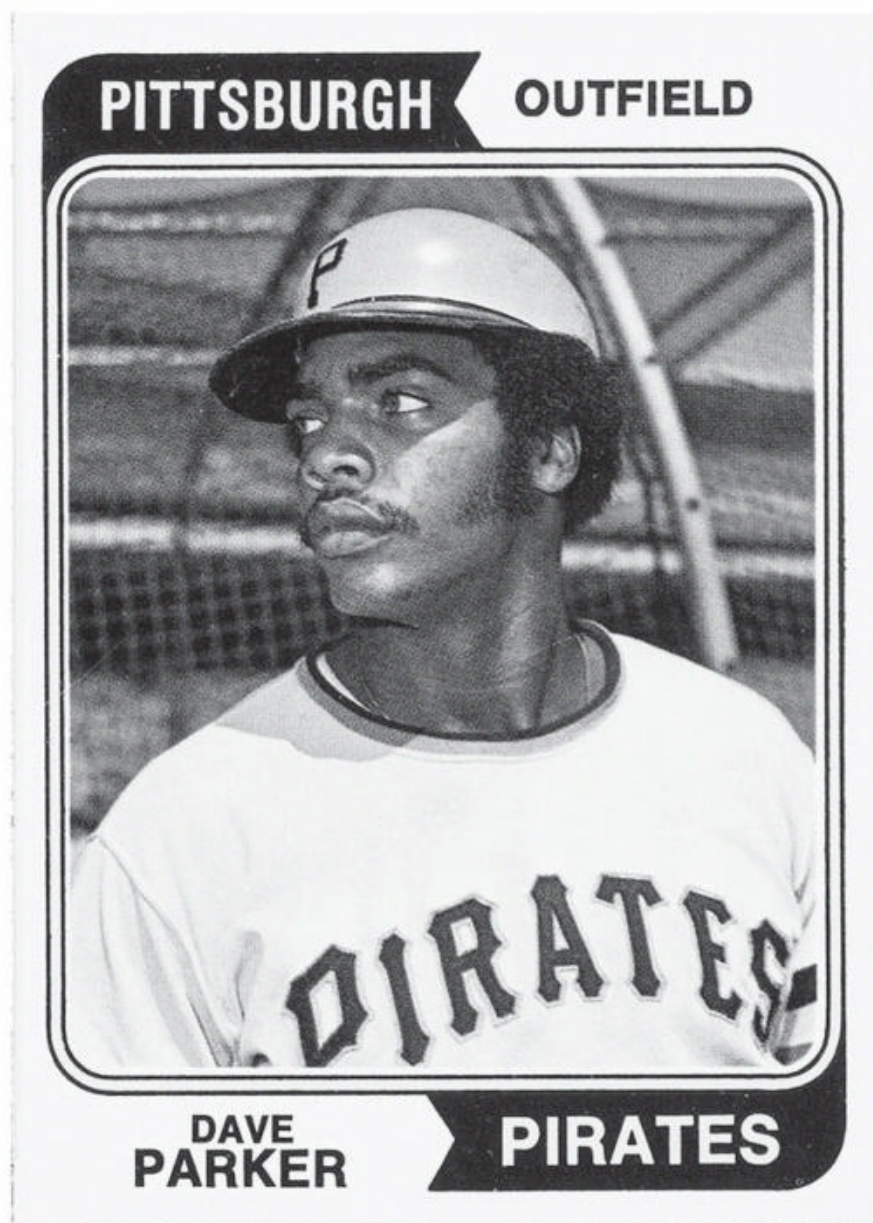

It was in the rookie league. I had just graduated from high school and headed down to Florida. Topps came to visit about a week or so after being there. That's when I gave out my first autograph. My autograph improved over the years because it wasn't that nice that first time.

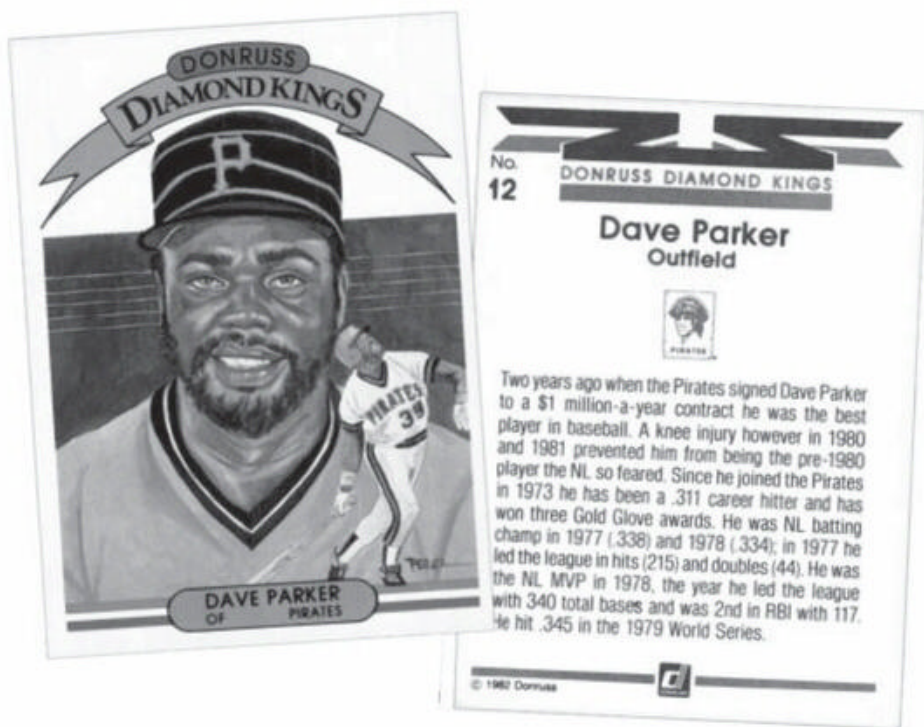

Your rookie card appeared in the 1974 Topps set. Do you remember seeing yourself on a trading card for the first time?

It was exciting to see your face on a card like the major leaguers. I remember seeing the card but it didn't have any major effect because I was so busy trying to position myself as a baseball player at the time.

Your first baseball card contract was in 1972 on a minor league deal. What did it mean to you and your teammates to have the opportunity to sign a baseball card deal?

It meant a lot because we weren't making a lot of money at the time. We appreciated getting a little piece of change. It was a thrill to do the first one. It seemed too good to be true at the time.

Speaking of autographs, do you have a memorable fan interaction over the course of your career?

I had a friend who was following me around. I was his favorite player. He was a big corporate executive. He would follow me around and I would see him in different cities. He was a guy that stuck with me all the way up until now.

Do you have a favorite card of your own over the years?

My rookie card. That is the one that I keep every extra one I get. I have a trophy case full of cards. I sit down and sign them on occasion because I want to leave my son something. I sign a lot of cards.

Do you have a room or man cave where you have memorabilia displayed?

It's an office. I have big trophy cases that I put all of my stuff in. I have a lot of cards and I take them out sometimes and play with them.

It's an interesting lineage in Pittsburgh. Roberto Clemente was an icon, and then the great Willie Stargell. You were next in that lineage of great Pirates players. Can you put into words what it meant to be the guy in Pittsburgh?

It was nice to be mentioned with those two guys. I think everybody wanted me to step into Clemente's shoes. That wasn't what I was trying to achieve. I was trying to establish myself as Dave Parker. I had a lot of people that wanted me to be the next Clemente.

Baseball card picture day was a big deal in Spring Training in the 1970s. Can you tell us about the significance from the early years in your career to the later years?

It was a big deal, especially for the minor leaguers and even for the big leaguers. They were passing out checks. Guys were sizing up their cards and seeing how they looked. It was a big photo day.

I'm sure you had the nicest card on the team, right?

I think so.

When you were a young kid, did you collect cards or memorabilia? Were there certain players you looked up to?

Frank Robinson and Vada Pinson played for the Reds. I used to go hustle balls that they hit out of the park. I would sell them to fans that were coming to the game. Baseball has been a major part of my life.

If we were to flip over one imaginary trading card that could encapsulate your entire career, what would you want written on the back of your card?

The best. That would be it.

You appeared at The National, the largest and most significant card and memorabilia show each year. What's it like signing at that level for huge crowds and thousands of people?

It is fun for me. You try to get to those big shows. You create a market for future cards. I enjoy doing those big shows because it creates more opportunities in the future.

The back of your 1982

Donruss Diamond Kings card mentions you were the first "million dollar" player. How significant was it to secure that contract and what did it mean to be a pioneer and trailblazer in that way?

I take pride in that fact because I revolutionized salary by doing that. The first is always the one that catches the negative stuff that comes along with it. It was great being the first but a lot of baggage came along with it. People didn't feel like I should receive a million dollars a year for playing baseball. I received a negative response from some Pittsburgh fans as well as fans from other teams. You wouldn't expect that to come along with the contract, but I got it anyway.

If you could go back to your playing days and do a jersey swap with any player you played against, who would you ask to swap jerseys with?

Roberto Clemente, Willie Mays and Hank Aaron. Only the best.

BEER COASTERS, GETCHA BEER COASTERS HERE!

Stadia lover combines brews and ballparks for unique collectible

Who doesn't love having a cold one at the ballpark? Beer and baseball have been intertwined since the game's early days, and the major U.S. breweries are still among the National Pastime's greatest sponsors. Two stadiums are even named after breweries.

That's where Ken Finnegan comes in. A longtime baseball fan, Finnegan decided to combine his love for beer and talent for micro-brewing with his interest in ballparks to create a set of 24 really neat 4-by-4 beer coasters that can be purchased through his website at www.classicball-parkbrew.com.

When he first contacted me about this novel idea, I was a bit skeptical. But Ken's passion for Stadia, coupled with the attention to detail in his product, won me over. So, let's find out how his "Suds and Stadia" enterprise came to be.

Give us a little background on your interest in baseball.

I am a native Long Islander but have spent the past 30 years living and working as an engineer in San Diego County, Calif. My oldest brother was a Mickey Mantle fan. Seven years later, I followed Thurman Munson. After the move to San Diego and the construction of Petco Park, I started to watch more National League baseball with the Padres, but my purist preferences had been well-established much earlier.

How did your focus gravitate towards Stadia?

Although I got used to living in San Diego, during my New York years I loved the idea of having Yankee Stadium or Shea Stadium to visit anytime I wanted. And I felt compelled to travel to the old Ebbets Field and Polo Grounds sites to imagine what the excitement must have been like in the old days when there were three MLB teams in New York.

As a young guy in the mid-1970s I heard about famous ballparks being torn down, and witnessed their aftermath status. When these parks were demolished, a connection to the city they inhabited was lost. It was kind of sad to see television news reports showing a ceremony at places like housing projects that had replaced the green grass, seats, fans and carnival-like baseball events of yesteryear. Also, my era saw the construction of many cookie-cutter stadiums that looked identical; the older ballparks, like Wrigley and Fenway, had their unique appearance that was dictated by the layout of the surrounding neighborhood. One had the impression that he was, in fact, watching a game from a neighborhood. This led me to read about and seek images of those classic parks. Color film footage of these old parks was hard to come by for me, but books provided some glimpses of them. Later, there came the Internet and there were more images to view.

By the early 1990s, at the beginning of my professional career, I had watched games at the Old Comiskey, Tiger Stadium, County Stadium, Memorial Stadium and Cleveland Municipal. I had even visited old demolition sites such as Connie Mack Stadium. I've enjoyed returning to Fenway and Wrigley numerous times and I've visited all of the California ballparks at least once.

How did you start collecting Stadia artifacts?

I come from a family of brick masons, and I know what to do with a trowel. Thus, it was fitting that when my brother showed me a souvenir shop up the street from the partially razed Old Comiskey in 1991, I purchased a white-painted Comiskey brick. This led me to hunt down a bunch of other bricks. Although conventional brick construction is rare these days, many of the old ballparks were at least brick-veneered, and these artifacts can still be found out there.

Along those lines, in 2014 I was passing by Wrigley while on a trip and they were doing some renovation on the façade. I was able to secure a concrete piece that had been pried loose from the Waveland Avenue wall. My collection has since expanded to some unrestored seats and other interesting fixtures. (Author's note: The same ballpark façade experience occurred with me a few years ago when my wife and I were in Boston during the off-season. Some brick work was being done around one of the upper Fenway Park windows and I persuaded one of the officers guarding the site to let me get past the barriers and scoop up a few brick chunks, which I still have. The policeman thought I was nuts, of course.)

How did the Ballpark Beer Coaster idea come about?

The idea morphed from creating potential fantasy breweries with old ballpark names to an “art meets nostalgia” Warhol-like design that would feature information on a spotlighted ballpark, a photo of the park and a choice artifact from the place. Several years into the beer coaster idea, I registered trademarks for the beer flavors and created my website. There is now a complete set of 24 beer coasters that are both attractive and informative.

Describe for us a typical coaster's design, besides the ballpark photo and artifact image.

When you first receive the coasters, you will notice the front has the term "active" and then the years "from" and "to." This is basically the ballpark's tombstone dates — when it was first built and when it was torn down. Then, the back of the coaster has an "open" and "closed" date. This is a little different. The "open" date is the same as the first "active" date, but the "closed" date is when a pro team stopped playing in it, and it basically became abandoned or severely repurposed, like when Crosley Field in Cincinnati became a car impound site from 1971-1972. Likewise, Memorial Stadium in Baltimore has the "active" dates as 1954-2002, because in 2002, it was finally torn down. But the "closing" is 1997, when the NFL Ravens played the last pro game there and the stadium went dark. Overall, it's a neat little history lesson on a cool-looking beer coaster.

Have there been any problems with obtaining artifacts to illustrate the various ballparks?

I have found the most difficult relics to acquire are from Houston's Colt 45 Stadium and Baker Bowl in Philadelphia, so I'm still on the hunt for those. But it's been fun finding the others. For example, I just worked out a swap with a Seattle metal recycling company for a numbered seat tag from the Kingdome. I know that place might not be considered "classic," but it sure was quirky, so I included it in the set.

Can a collector purchase individual coasters, or only the set?

Individually, the coasters are $2.50. The complete set is $36. I'm not trying to make a ton of money here. It's more of an extension of my hobby and a way to interact with other Stadia enthusiasts.

Will you produce actual brewed beers to accompany the coasters in the future?

For now, the flavors are strictly a home-brewing operation, with a few having been released in small batches to nearby outlets. But I am making some good local contacts and I'm constantly listening for advanced ideas. So, you never know.

Obviously, Ken's ardor for ballparks of the past comes through in both his personal collection and his idea to preserve their memory in a unique collectible. So, if you're looking for the perfect item to dress up your baseball man cave bar, check out his Classic Park Brew Collectible Coasters.

Editor's Note: Finnegan has also created NFTs of his coasters. They can be found at rarible.com.
